The New-York Times.

VOL. VII.....NO. 1892. NEW-YORK, MONDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

Among the signers of the petition circulated, expressing entire confidence in the institution and their willingness to let their deposits remain untouched, were many of the largest depositors. One name—that of an executor—represented $30,000 in the Bank; another $10,000, one $6,000, and so along down to small amounts.

We understand that $90,000 was paid out Saturday, and about $100,000 since the run commenced on Thursday last. The Bank has abundant resources, and will be able to meet all demands, even if the run should continue. A Bank in Brooklyn and another in New-York, stand ready to furnish all the assistance that may be necessary. Soon after the closing of the doors Saturday, a poor woman reached the Bank and seemed to be in great distress. She attracted the attention of an officer of the Bank, and explained to him that she had been thrown out of employment, and all that she had to depend upon for the support of her family during the Winter was in the Bank. The person addressed took her book, and from his pocket paid the full deposit in bankable money.

Among those who succeeded in getting their money Saturday, was a rag-picker, who drew out $2,500. The same person owns several houses and lots in East Brooklyn.

A hard specimen of a woman, who has had regular relief for several Winters past from the Superintendent of the Poor, drew out $1,400. A gentleman formerly connected with the office of Superintendent of the Poor, says that he recognized scores of depositors who have regularly received assistance from that office.

The Central Bank of Brooklyn.

The following card was issued by the Board of Directors of the Central Bank of Brooklyn:

TO THE PUBLIC.

In consequence of the unusual disarrangement of commercial finances, the Central Bank of Brooklyn has suspended payment, and will go into liquidation. The notes of the Bank being secured by State Stocks deposited with the Department at Albany, holders need make no sacrifice—arrangements will speedily be made for their redemption.

Depositors will receive the amounts due them as soon after collections are made from the receivables as the Court will direct. No loss can possibly result to them.

How much, if any, loss will be sustained by the stockholders will depend on the duration, severity, and general effect of the money pressure. This we know, that the Bank has not been jeopardized by mismanagement, or its properties wasted by extravagance.

JOHN L. SPADER, Esq., the Receiver appointed by the Court, has our highest confidence, and we feel assured that he will close his trust as speedily and favorably as circumstances will admit.

(Signed,) for the Directors,
ED. COPELAND, President.
J. K. PRUYN, Cashier.

OTHER BROOKLYN BANKS.—The run upon the City Bank of Brooklyn has almost entirely subsided. Upon the other Banks there is no run whatever.

The Brooklyn Water Works.

There are nearly two thousand men employed in the construction of these works. The contractors do not expect to suspend operations, as has been intimated they would be compelled to do, but to the contrary expect to keep all of their present force at work all Winter.

The Stevedores and 'Longshoremen.

A visit among the stevedores, and extened inquiries as to the general stagnation in their department of industry, have revealed a most unexampled state of affairs, and are very discouraging to the 'longshoremen. The person first whom our reporter visited on South-street has been in the shipping business 25 years, and in the business as a stevedore for 9 years. He says he does not think he has ever seen so many idle men, and business in his line so dull as it is at present. Men are everywhere complaining of having nothing to do, no money, and their families suffering in consequence. Ships are lying at the docks idle, there being no freights going. A year ago he was loading, on an average, three ships a month for one California house. Now he loads about one ship for the same house in six weeks. In the European trade there was a busy time generally. Now their best ships are lying up in all directions for want of freights. One man in New-York has had two large, fine ships lying up in Brooklyn all summer, and there are a large number of other ships which have been lying up throughout the summer.

Between Peck-slip and the Battery, he thought five hundred good men could be found lying idle, waiting for a job of work. They could literally find nothing to do. They have families, and their situation is daily becoming more distressing. What they are to do for the winter, "the Lord only knows," unless there should be a revival of business, and for this we see no prospect at present. His business has generally provided bread for two hundred families; he is now doing nothing.

A laboring man who has worked along shore for thirty-seven years, a sober and industrious man, and now works for this stevedore, says he has never seen so poor a time for work. It is worse than in the shin-plaster times.

Another stevedore who has been engaged in loading East India and California ships, gives an equally gloomy account of affairs. He has been seventeen years in business as a stevedore, and led the first horse, he thinks, which hoisted a ship's cargo on a New-York dock; he is now a ship-owner himself, and for many years has given employment to a large number of men. He has done more for seven or eight years than any two other stevedores in the City, but he has never known so universal a stagnation in business. In April, 1856, the average number of men employed was 150, and his payments $600 weekly. In one month in 1851 he paid over $9,000 for labor in loading ships. During the years 1848, '49 and '50, he had from seven to ten ships loading for California all the time, paying weekly from $1,500 to $2,500 for labor. For the last three years he has employed about one hundred daily, the year round; he now has only thirteen at work, and only one vessel loading, paying out about $160 per week. Six or seven of his vessels are lying still, and he sees no prospect of their moving soon. It is only the wealthiest houses which seem able to withstand the general paralysis in business, and to keep their ships moving. He has ships lying up at Twenty-eighth-street, Green Point, Brooklyn, Dry Dock, and the ship yards, with some of his best men on board of them as ship-keepers, to whom he pays about half the wages they have earned when business was good. To economize they have, many of them, given up their houses and taken their families on board the ships with them to live. Many have left the City and gone upon the Lakes for employment. It is the best men generally who find the demand to hire. Others of his force have shipped and gone to sea. Every day men beseech him earnestly to give them work at any price, that they may give bread to their families.

The general opinion among ship owners is, however, that as soon as grain and other produce can come forward, freights will revive. Some of the oldest houses regard the present as a favorable time to buy into good ships, and believe that six months hence the shipping interest will advance greatly. So that he regards the present embarrassment as only temporary, although the interruption of business, and the consequent depriving of many persons of employment at a season when, of all others, they need it most, must cause great distress among laborers.

A stevedore engaged in the New-Orleans lines confirms, in every essential particular, the accounts of his associates in other departments of trade. He says there is little doing. His ships have gone generally every ten days, but it now requires from three to four weeks to procure an equal quantity of freight, or to fill them up. The Knickerbocker sailed on Saturday with a fair freight and passenger list. She has been four weeks loading. There has never been anything like the present stagnation. Occasional interruptions have occurred within his experience, which extends ten years back, but nothing like the present. He has four ships in one line alone laid up. Has employed from 40 to 100 men weekly, but has now only 15 or 20 at work—100 less than the usual number. But he laments this state of things as but temporary; and believes the shipping interest will be the first to revive. He thinks there are only 1,000 longshoremen out of work. Most of them have families, and such as can find opportunities, are going to sea.

Repairing ships at the Dry Docks is also dull, for the reason that shipowners do not know when their vessels may be wanted, and in the present state of the money market they do not wish large bills for repairs to pay before they find business to employ their ships.

Work in the Navy Yard.

The monetary and business derangements thus far appear to have but little effect upon Uncle Sam's arrangements, at least as far as the Navy Yard is concerned. Should there be, however, a general reduction of wages outside, the employers in the Navy Yard would probably suffer a corresponding reduction, as they graduate their pay rolls by the prevailing prices. The number of men employed is kept up to about 1,700. There are frequent discharges of portions of the force, but as many are taken on in some other department, so that about the same number are always employed.

The repairs going on upon the frigate Sarannah alone, employ several hundred men. She is being raised, and will be completed in about two months. The sloop-of-war Vincennes is now ready for sea, and orders have been issued for her officers to report for duty on the 20th instant. She is to be commanded by Capt. BENJAMIN J. TOTTEN, and is destined for the coast of Africa. The steamer Dispatch, (Propeller,) which has had new boilers supplied, and been thoroughly repaired, is now about ready for sea. The storeships Supply and Relief are also ready for sea, but no officers are yet detailed for them. The schooner Varina went into commission on the 5th ult., and will sail soon for the Isthmus of Darien, taking out the Government party for the survey of the Atrato River.

The work upon the new Store House is progressing, but it will have to be suspended when the frosts set in. This will probably throw out most of those now engaged upon that portion of the public work. The work on the Artesian Well is suspended, as there is an abundant supply of water at the present depth, yielding 120 gallons per minute. Its quality is now being tested for the uses of the yard.

Applications for enlistment in the Navy have increased of late, owing to the stagnation in merchant shipping, which has thrown so many out of employment, both seamen and 'longshoremen. There is, consequently, no difficulty in procuring any number of men.

Dr. M. O'HARA, Surgeon of the receiving ship, was subpœnaed to attend the Naval Court, at Washington.

The Bergen Tunnel Workmen are Paid Off.

The fear of disturbance that prevailed on Friday among those interested in the Bergen Tunnel improvements was not realized Saturday; although from Friday until 6 o'clock Saturday morning there was no disposition among the laboring men to wait for their money. They were loud in their threats, until after 6 o'clock, when Sheriff BRADY called upon Brigadier-General HAYFIELD, who called the Highwood Guards, Captain MCGEE; National Guards, Captain VAN HOUTEN; Hudson Rifles, Captain BOURGERAY; Hudson County Artillery, (six field pieces,) Captain HERAMES, of Hoboken; and the Greys, Continentals, and Montgomery Guards, of Jersey City; all under command of DUDLEY S. GREGORY. The first Division (Hoboken) marched to the foot of Bergen Hill, where they loaded with blank cartridge, and then marched up the hill. There they found about one hundred of the discontented men, who hooted and laughed at them. The military marched on to the jail, and went inside the inclosure and stacked arms. About this time a stone (weighing some four pounds) was thrown through a window of the jail, which grazed the head of a son of Mr. LAWSON, the jailor. The second division then arrived, and so did Mayor CARPENTER, of Hudson City. The Mayor told the men they would be paid off in half an hour, and that there would be no occasion for any disturbance. The announcement was received with cheers, and away they rushed to the office of the contractor. The Highwood Guards and the Continentals followed, and surrounded the office. The workmen then passed in in line and were paid.

The Sabbath.

Firms cannot break—the weakest house cannot suspend—there are no runs upon banks on Sunday. So as all that excites our people first just now, is suspensions, failures, assignments, runs, and as there could be no new fuel for the flame yesterday, it was one of the quietest, most refreshing days of the year. As the people generally are not so stupid as to read Sunday papers, they enjoyed their rest undisturbed—their thoughts reverting to the legitimate topics of the day, gaining elasticity and fresh strength to withstand the probable troubles that the coming week is big with.

Not all even of church-going people were so happy, however, since in some the lessons of the Revulsion were reiterated in the pulpit, and the same harrowing trains of thought that for six days had tormented them, were bid to cruise again through their brains, only in a Sunday suit.

The day was note-worthy for its delicious freshness—the sun shining unclouded from its rising till its setting—and there being no wind stirring. It was just cool enough to make moderate fires feel grateful in parlors, and light overcoats no burden in the street or in unwarmed churches.

The Roman Catholic clergy, in the several churches in Brooklyn, assured their people that the depositors in the Savings Banks were in no danger whatever of losing anything, and advised all to let their deposits remain. This advice is timely, and will probably prevent any further run upon these institutions in that city.

The sermon that Dr. CHEEVER commenced on Sunday evening, the 4th, he continued last night to a crowded house. He followed the same drift of discourse as then.

Rev. Dr. BETHUNE delivered a very excellent discourse in his church in Pierrepont-street, on "The Preciousness of Christ" to those who love Him. He made no allusion to the financial troubles, other than by an expression to the effect that there were at the present time many temptations to step aside from the higher duties of the chosen Preacher of the Word, and flatter their vanity by exhibiting themselves as teachers of finance. He left it to be inferred that in his opinion the preacher should confine himself to teaching Christ crucified, leaving questions of finance to the money-changers.

Before the Tabernacle congregation, temporarily, at the City Assembly Rooms, Rev. Dr. SCHAUFFLER, of Constantinople, who is already well known to the friends of Missions, in this City, as a missionary at Constantinople, made a statement concerning the present religious aspect of Turkey.

The English Evangelical Lutheran Church of St. James consecrated its new and hand some edifice in Fifteenth-street, between Second and Third avenues yesterday. In the three services, Rev. Drs. SCHMIDT, POHLMAN and STORK assisted the pastor to make the occasion memorable.

REV. DR. BELLOWS.

Rev. Dr. BELLOWS, in the closing part of his sermon, in his church, in Fourth-avenue, yesterday morning, dwelt very happily upon the beneficial results, in a religious point of view, which, he trusted, would follow from the financial difficulties in which this community is enveloped. He took his text from 1 Peter v. 7: "Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you."

We did not realize, he said, one half the benefits which we each enjoy. There were men who made it their particular vocation to shoulder, each one, some of our cares and responsibilities and relieve us of the burden. We sent our children to the Public Schools provided for their education; they were instructed there in branches of various learning. There were teachers who toiled and racked their brains to teach the young, and each from us all the cares of education, which were permitted to devolve upon themselves. So there were statesmen who occupied their minds in disentangling knotty questions of state policy; in making treaties, creating or amending legislative enactments for the safety and common welfare of all. So ministers of the Gospel labored to remove the stain of sin from our souls. But in so taking upon themselves the care of others, they themselves were benefited; all who labored thus would themselves derive profit from it, for the care came not upon them but upon God. It was a Divine law, that those who labored to do good should themselves be better for it. Those benefits which men voluntarily took it upon themselves to bestow, we did not appreciate. We saw a roof above our heads, apparently hanging in the air, but if we looked after its supporting columns, we should find there were other men who were bearing its weight upon their shoulders for us. But the burden was not felt by rich men; they cast their care upon God. In the present commercial crisis we should learn to cast our cares upon Him; to believe that He would bear them for us if we did our duty; to believe that when we did good to others, relieving their distresses in time of need, that He could also relieve ours. Let the young believe when their father came home with sadened brow from the heavy business troubles of the day, when their mother gave them food moistened with her own tears, shed in her labor to procure their daily bread,—let them believe that God had sent the affliction to work some good. He had provided that after the storm the bow of promise, and then the bursting sunshine should break forth. If the present distressed should work a reformation in the souls of those who had pursued worldly things too closely; if they were taught how little real value there was in mere earthly riches, and how much more in enduring were those which might be attained hereafter, he (the clergyman) would thank God; the chastening would not have been in vain.

MR. BEECHER'S ADVICE TO HIS PEOPLE.—Mr. BEECHER last evening preached another sermon on the "Times," full of sound sense and useful lessons. Taking his text from the 73d Psalm, 23d to 26th verses, he drew comparisons of man's strength and weakness, especially in Commerce, which is the life of nations. But while men had walked up and down the street, and thought they were God, the strongest of them had suddenly fallen down, and the wise man had become as silly as the fool. Where is credit now; has it been lifted up or sunk down, or has it evaporated to the East or West? No man can tell. A great nation sits down and broods, and no man can help himself or his neighbor, nor can he tell what hurt him. Mr. BEECHER declared that not even among the ruins of old Palmyra did he feel so great a sense of desolateness as when he walked the streets of New-York in these days, and saw men once strong, now so weak, so counseless, so readily alarmed at the shaking of a straw. Trouble has overtaken the nation, and it shows the folly of man's arrogance. He desired to say a word suggested by the present difficulties. He had been among his people as much as time and health would permit, and he had a little advice to give them. It might be thought that the counsel he was to offer would come more appropriately from a physician than from the pulpit. It was true it would be such advice as was seldom heard in preaching, but his theory was that the minister should be a schoolmaster, a lawyer, a physician, everything; and that the pulpit should speak of all that concerns life. A great many of his hearers had been brought into straits and troubles. He had talked with many of them. He considered it his duty to labor in their behalf, that they might be sound in body and sound in mind, as well as sound in faith. They are brought into circumstances which required all the power they could bring to bear to carry them safely through. The business of every day does not hurt a man. It becomes a habit, and he performs it easily. But let that business be thrown back upon him, and let him brood over the trouble it gives him, and he breaks down in body and mind. Therefore, take care of yourselves. In the first place, every man should take care of his body. If your body fails, your energy is gone. It must not fail you. You want food and sleep. Sleep is to a man's brain what the rain is to our cisterns, with this difference—that our cisterns hold a supply for several days, whereas our brains hold a supply for one day only. Sleep over night is the shower that fills it up. We owe it as a duty to ourselves to see that this central power be not exhausted by sleeplessness. It is a duty to sleep enough. A man who cannot sleep may as well stop business and put business in the hands of the doctor. He who broods over red-hot plans will end his days in a lunatic asylum. Both sleep and food are greatly under the control of the will. They must be treated as you treat refractory children who refuse to eat when setting out, upon a journey. If they say "I can't," you are to say, "You shall, you must!" Then, beware of substituting stimulants for nutriment. This time is one which will make ten thousand men go down to a drunkard's grave. Do without brandy. Brandy may take you through, but it will be out of the wrong gate. Beware, too, of nervousness. A hot brain is like a new candle put into a hot candlestick. It burns off at one end and melts off at the other, and is all gone in a moment. Don't talk too much. It is wonderful how much a man may talk himself away. Men talk over their troubles going up Broadway—talk them over going over the ferry—talk in their houses. Meet your friend with a cheerful face. Do not make a reef of your mind, to wind and unwind your business upon every day. Never let New-York cross the ferry with you. Never let it cross your threshold any more than you would a wolf. Rest yourself at your home, leave your business behind you, and change the current of your life every night in the company of your wife and children. If necessary, go home to a bath. It would do you good to bathe every day, some of you. Bathe in music. Try that. If you have no piano, no band of corded instruments is half so sweet as the voice of an affectionate wife and the prattle of children. Don't go home to burrow in your bed as an animal burrows in the earth, to hide yourself. If you have been in the habit of riding out, don't sell your horses. Take your ride as you have been accustomed to do—morning, afternoon and evening. Love music. Find recreation. Go to the Philharmonic Concerts; go and buy tickets to them, if the times are hard; the music will do you good. Beware of uncomfortableness. Now is the time to let the bucket go down to the very bottom of the well of friendship, and let it bring up cooling draughts. Let us not be children in these times. Let us not be weak, despondent, but act like men resolved to ride out the storm and come ashore somehow. Many of you will save more than you thought. Some of you will save a sound heart, and that is better than money. Much more of similar purport was said by Mr. BEECHER. He said he was earnest, and with his counsel coupled a recommendation for implicit faith in Providence.

In the morning he preached upon "Faith,"—as the power of living upon the invisible realities of the spiritual world, without being fettered and degraded by the material and visible things of the present. The present world only feeds the animal nature, which develops the spiritual and is necessary to it. But the spiritual must live by what is invisible and eternal,—just as the flower is fed by the sunshine and the air, although the plant which bears it must have its roots in the earth. He inculcated indifference to changes of our outward condition as entirely unimportant, so long as our inner life is vigorous and true.

DR. CHAPIN ON THE CRISIS.

The financial crisis was again the theme of Rev. Dr. CHAPIN's discourse last night. The Church, in anticipation of the subject, was inconveniently crowded, and many persons could not obtain admittance. Dr. CHAPIN chose for his text, Job, chap. 5, verse 8: "Affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground." The Book of Job, remarked the preacher, offered to the world the greatest subject of reflection ever presented to the mind of man. It was an attempt, and the greatest attempt ever made, to solve the everlasting problem—the origin of evil. That problem never pressed upon man with a greater weight than at this hour. The core of its argument was in the heart of man, for on every man, as upon Job, misfortune, when they commenced, came quicker than they could be told. One lesson to be derived from the consideration of this problem was, that there was no chance work in God's world that "affliction did not spring out of the dust, or trouble out of the ground" which meant that law did not govern the universe, but that God did. It was a singular consideration that misfortunes never came alone, as the proverb said, but came sweeping on us all at once. That was Job's experience. He had the whirlwind, the fire, and the earthquake.

So with us, and other nations in modern times, when troubles came they came altogether. The great combination of disasters he (the preacher) would liken to a catalepsy. It was indeed a commercial catalepsy. One authority said that it was owing to the extravagance of the women, another that paper money occasioned it; another that we lived too fast, and still another that it was a drain of specie. But it was really none of these. It was a panic extending through the nations—the same panic that made the children of the East rise in rebellion against England. Was it not a strange thing that in these bright Autumn days there should fall such a gloomy shadow on the earth? The singularity was the greater, inasmuch as this combination of maladies was increasing every day. The knowing ones said it would soon blow over, but it has already swept away our best men, and still it blows the harder, still the storm increases. It was no combination of accidents could produce this. It was the will of the Divinity. The suddenness with which it had fallen upon us, partook of the visitation of locusts, and pestilence, in the ancient days. And, as such, it was designed as an admonition, as a providence, for no one could discuss its providential aspects, or no one could see them (though some, it was true, tried to it). What would providential aspects, may be enumerate reference to our neglect of duty. But, we must consider, that, although the concentration of causes which had brought about the present financial convulsion might be providential in its bearing upon us as a nation, yet the loss was it incumbent upon us to repent our sins as individuals. In times of prosperity, men have been wont to acknowledge their own individual sins, and to the general, national sin, was acknowledged and repented of. And we have no right to hide our sins under a veil of generalities, but each man and woman must do their own repentance. We can draw on Providence to alleviate our misfortunes, but we must be morally solvent. Providence will take up our prayers, but will not pay our debts. Calamities and revolutions bring men to learn that there is a God in the world. They will recognize him in the dreadful shadow, who do not find him in the sunlight. They find him in the thunder, but not in the still, small voice. They might find him in the present storm that toppled down great houses, when they could not discover him in the Summer rain. Avarice is our ruling passion. It was no new vice. It was as in the days of Lycurgus, who condemned it as the prominent vice of his time. It is shown in the exuberant enterprise of the youth of the American nation, whose only hope is to speedily get rich—that nation which has written its autograph with the keels of its merchant ships all round the world. But if this avarice might be checked in the present season, it would not be for evil, but for a higher good, that this paralysis had checked our commerce. The benefit of these trials was to result to the individual. Constant success impoverishes the mind, but trials and the performance of duties exalt us to a spiritual reality. If it is the great end of life to be prosperous and wealthy in this world, then indeed we are tried to no purpose. But if anything higher is to be gathered out of life, then who shall say that these calamities are calamities? Many a man, in this great crisis, may reckon his losses with a heavy heart, and say "All is gone, and nothing saved;" but if he has gained inward strength, and a development of his soul, may he not come forth from this ordeal of bankruptcy a richer man than he went into it?

MISSIONARY MEETING.

Statement of Affairs in India by a Returned Missionary.

The missionary service held last evening in Dr. PORTS' Church, corner of University-place and Tenth-street, was attended by one of the largest and most intelligent congregations which the missionary cause has anywhere convoked. The interest of the occasion was mainly centred in an address on the cause and character of the late fearful outbreak in British India, by Rev. L. G. HAY, one of the Missionaries of the Board of the Presbyterian Church, who has just arrived in this country from the scene of the great revolt. Rev. Dr. PORTS presided, and gave out the opening Psalm, the 93d.

Rev. Dr. MASON, of Paris, offered prayer. Whilst bowing in humble submission to the Almighty will, yet the heart ached, he said, to hear of the death of their brethren in India, who had been so unexpectedly cut off from their families, their friends, the Church which sent them, and that Missionary cause for which so many prayers had ascended before the Throne of Grace, and which had been subjected to so many trials and dangers in a great country in which was now threatened, momentarily, at least, with helpless overthrow.

At the close of another hymn, Rev. Mr. HAY rose in the pulpit, and proceeded at once with the subject of his discourse.

British India, he said, contained about 150,000,000 of people. It has been governed by the East India Company, and its Governor-General resided at Calcutta. The Governor-General had exercised despotic power over the whole land within certain well-defined limits, but, for the better government of the country, the power has been distributed into three Presidencies: Bombay, Madras and Bengal. The Bengal Presidency extended from Calcutta to the River Sutledy, which was the southern boundary of the Punjaub. All that lay between Benares and the River Sutledy was called the Northwestern Provinces, and was governed under the Governor-General by a Lieutenant-Governor who resided at Agra. All this part of India, from Calcutta to the Sutledy, was inhabited by Hindoos and Mahomedans. All north of them was occupied by the Sikhs or Punjaubaws, as they were called, a different race, speaking a different language, and holding a different religion. The missions of the Presbyterian Church extended from the lower part of the north western provinces, Allahabad, at the junction of the Ganges with the Jumba, up to the northern limit of the Punjaub, and through the country of the Sikhs. In this part of the country there were stationed about 70,000 native troops of the line and about 20,000 native artillery and cavalry—altogether about 100,000 troops. Nearly all present were aware that the mutiny first began at Behlapoor, that two regiments there showed signs of disaffection and wounded one of the officers and a sergeant; that one of them was disbanded; that 400 men of the other were also disbanded, and that these were turned loose upon the country. That was the beginning of the rebellion, but at that time it was supposed to be simply local. A very short time afterwards, before any one was prepared for it, comes that thunderbolt like a clap of thunder, the news came, that at a place where there were 1,700 European troops, the native troops had risen, murdered and plundered all they could reach, and, in the course of an hour or two, or in a single night, many friends whom he (Mr. HAY) and all others had seen but a short time before at Allahabad—officers, civilians, merchants, traders—were destroyed by the rebels. They had scarcely got news of this when the information reached them that at Delphi, 18 miles from Agra, three regiments there had joined the insurgents, and that merchants, officers, civil and military, the judge the commissions were all gone also. Then people began to say that perhaps this was a Mohammedan rebellion, because they had thought it was confined to the army. But when Delhi was taken, when the old Mogul was re-established on his throne, and began through his viziers to issue his orders, they believed it was a Mahommedan rebellion, and that as the native army was two-thirds Hindoo, and but one-third Mahommedan, the former would soon have their eyes opened to the designs of their associates and the difficulty would stop at Delhi. But another station a few miles below Delhi also fell, and there also the outbreak came suddenly. From that station the mutiny spread in all directions, until it became so fearfully that many, if not most of those who could leave the station, fled to Calcutta. On the 23d of May, the alarm at Allahabad became so bad that all the ladies and children residing there were sent into the Fort, but all the gentlemen remained outside, hoping there to intimidate the rebels, and continued in that state for a fortnight. Even yet so great seemed to be the blindness, that many of the officers of the army, as well as civilians, up to the very last day, had no fear of the troops in the station. Their only dread was that troops from the other stations that had revolted might come to upset them and attack them. And before they went into the fort those troops themselves had caught in their toils two spies whom they reported to the commanding officer as having come with the intentions of bribing them—inducing them from their allegiance, and had told them that outside the city walls four or five thousand men were ready to join them. These men were given up as spies were tried and impaled, and the soldiers who gave the information were complimented publicly by the highest officer present, and some of them promoted on the spot. Everybody, almost, seemed to have been deceived. On the 6th of June the tocsin sounded that the station below them at Benares had been attacked, burned to the ground, and hundreds of the inhabitants murdered. That was 70 miles further south. This, of course, put them in every one. The telegraph then came out on the side of their station; the mails were stopped and everything portended danger. On that night all the Europeans went into the fort. The only troops there were the Sikhs and a few artillery men that had remained true. The fort was fortified, and they were fortified, and they were fortified. That constituted their whole defence, and

The Panic in Brooklyn—A Run upon the Brooklyn Savings Bank.

The closing of the Central Bank of Brooklyn on Friday, which very materially to the panic in that City. One of the Roman Catholic institutions had some weeks before deposited in this Bank, and when it became generally known that it had really been closed, which before was high enough, assumed an intensity that caused serious forebodings. The consequence was that at an early hour on Saturday several thousand of this class of depositors were assembled in front of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, at the corner of Concord and Fulton-streets, where they awaited with the utmost impatience the arrival of the hour for opening. At the usual hour, the doors of the Bank were thrown open and the excited crowd rushed in pell-mell, each eager to be the first to withdraw their money. The officers went immediately to work and paid as fast as possible the claims as presented. The excitement caused by this rush spread rapidly throughout the City, and thousands during the morning wended their way to the vicinity of the Bank, attracted either by curiosity or interest. The more panic-stricken of the excited ones inside to be still more panic-stricken. The rush upon the counter by this mass of frantic human beings was at one time fearful to look upon. Several very respectable citizens attempted to quiet their fears, but there were not a few who, regardless of what they wanted, it was said. Fearful if the statement continued that there might be a breach of the peace, Assistant-Inspector Matsell, of the First Precinct Police, with a squad of men, was sent to the Bank to preserve order and to enable the Bank officers to meet the demand upon them. For some time, it was considerable to do, and under the circumstances it was done well. About 11 o'clock a portion of the depositors was organized, and a committee was appointed, to which they expressed their confidence in the safety and solvency of the Bank, and to request the depositors not to withdraw their money. A petition, headed with the signatures of the committee, was circulated by a Committee, and numerous persons put their names to this before leaving the Bank. The effect was most salutary—the great excitement subsided, and people after this acted more rationally.

The following are the resolutions, as adopted:

Resolved, That this meeting of Depositors in the Brooklyn Savings Bank have full confidence in the ability and solvency of the Bank, and that we will not withdraw our money, except for our growing necessities, and that we call upon the working men and citizens of Brooklyn to leave their deposits in the Bank.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to the officers of the Brooklyn Savings Bank for their faithfulness and courtesy in the discharge of their duties.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Brooklyn papers.

It was soon evident that the only persons causing this difficulty were the Irish Roman Catholics, who had been frightened nearly to death by the stoppage of the Central Bank, which had the funds of a Catholic Institution locked up. Mr. Hassin, and many other Catholic citizens, endeavored to persuade the people that they were acting against their own interests, that their money was perfectly safe, but they could not be persuaded, and pushed on for their money. Some Catholic friends came in, and they addressed their co-religionists, and expressed their entire confidence in the safety of the funds on deposit, but they could not be induced to leave satisfied, but these persons went home to keep up the general excitement, promising that they would return early next morning, and they could possibly arrange their business so as to attend. At 1 o'clock P. M., there was a large crowd in front of the Bank, and about 200 had not been paid, but a majority of these did not wait to withdraw their funds. And when the doors were closed at 3 o'clock (the usual hour) not every than 100 hundred depositors were inside of the Bank. Each upon receiving his money was passed out, and quite a number, not their gold before reaching the street. One woman had $200 taken from her by some of the light-fingered gentry, and she avowed her intention to make the Bank Officers pay her over again. Several other losses were reported, and in every instance the thieves operated either on the steps of the Bank, or on the sidewalk immediately in front of it. A large number of pickpockets were in the crowd, and all they could to keep up the excitement by urging the frightened depositors to draw their money, and some of the Irish told them the safety of the Bank was not to be trusted. The Police endeavored to thwart their operations, but the evil was so great, and the people so excited, that their speech more readily believed anything said against their interest than the truth.

Among those who succeeded in getting their money Saturday, was a rag-picker, who drew out $2,500. The same person owns several houses and lots in East Brooklyn.

A hard specimen of a woman, who has had regular relief for several Winters past from the Superintendent of the Poor, drew out $1,400. A gentleman formerly connected with the office of Superintendent of the Poor, says that he recognized scores of depositors who have regularly received assistance from that office.

The Bowery Savings Bank.

The run upon the Bowery Savings Bank, on Friday, was not to some extent run on the Bowery Savings Bank, there is no connection whatever between the institutions. On Friday over $100,000 were paid out by the Bowery Savings Bank. Some of the depositors were there before the hour for opening, and a large crowd had collected, and directly after the doors were opened the entire building was filled with applicants for "principal and interest," and continued throughout the day till 4 o'clock P. M., when the Bank finally closed, the crowd clamoring now being 2 P. M. So great was the rush that several policemen were detailed to the Bank to keep order. The amount paid out on Saturday was $90,000. It was readily paid, and as long as the demand will be as readily met. We would caution our citizens against these runs on the Savings Banks. They are perfectly secure, and the depositors in them are the only pay-masters of their money. They are the only pay-masters of their money, inasmuch as they lose the interest of their funds for the next half year commencing with July. The run on the Bowery Savings Bank, on Saturday, was kept up by an ignorant class of depositors—ignorant at least of banking business. The Bowery Savings Bank will honor every call made upon it by individuals whose panic outstrips their prudence.

DESTRUCTION OF PIRATICAL LORCHAS AT NINGPO.

From the North China Herald, July 4.

The accounts that have from time to time appeared in our columns concerning the desperate character and piratical proceedings of the Portuguese fleet of Lorchas on the coast, particularly at Ningpo will have prepared the public in some measure for the following:

It appears that after the collision between these desperadoes and the French vessel, mentioned by us not long, again representations were made by the French Consul at Ningpo to the Governor of Ningpo on the subject, who invested the Commanders of H. I. M. vessels Capricieuse and Dauntless with authority to search and take possession of suspected vessels under the Portuguese flag, and particularly certain vessels and persons described. The Morneau arrived here on 26th and the Capricieuse on the same day at Ningpo. The arrival was opportune for the object of their mission, as on that day the West-coast Junks captured the whole of the Portuguese vessels lying in Ningpo and delivered the prisoners to the Commander of the Capricieuse, and others that came here for refuge have fallen into the power of the Morneau as mentioned before.

Letters from Ningpo to 30th ult. inform us that the Portuguese fleet of seven or eight lorchas went into port on the 23d. On the 25th the Canton junks, numbering 10 to 15, arrived and prepared for engagement, [illegible] and took up a position on the opposite side of the river. They began the attack, and soon had possession of every lorcha, which the Portuguese had deserted, seeking refuge on shore where they were arrested and dispersed to Canton, took place. The Chinese with revengeful fury slaughtering them and blowing up the houses where they sought shelter.

There were 41 Portuguese lying dead before the Portuguese Consulate (which having been sacked, was deserted, and the flag down) when our informants, letter was closed. The account does not give the number of Chinese killed and wounded, but mentions one Frenchman among the former, and one Englishman among the latter. There were sailors of these nations, as well as Americans and others with the Chinese, and on the Portuguese side some Manillamen. The Portuguese Consul with his family fled to the French Mission at Tien-tai-ting.

[illegible] Capricieuse had just arrived when the latest accounts left, and we believe the prisoners were landed on board the Commander's ship.

The fate of the Portuguese fleet, Joan Maria Garman, in his schooner Amazon, was then lying outside the port of Ningpo when the Canton fleet went in (on hearing of the attack, he met for this port and came into harbor. The was soon known, and closely watched until daylight of the following morning, when the French and Portuguese Consuls, with the commander of the French steamer Marceau, in two armed boats, went on board and took her without any resistance. Capt. Sir F. Nuneaca of H. M. S. Pique having been made acquainted with the intended measures had two boats armed and ready to act in case of emergency. The masters and crew, consisting of 54, including Portuguese, French and others, were secured with irons, and the schooner laid alongside, and under the guns of the Marceau. The Chinese portion of the crew, about fifteen, were handed over to their mandarins. This took place on Monday last; on Wednesday, three lorchas, part of the same fleet, arrived at Woosung, the masters of two of them, with three other men, came up to Shanghai under pretence of asking permission to come into port, but, no doubt, to see how matters stood, in which they were so deeply interested. They produced their sailing papers to the Consul who quickly identified them as part of the black list. They were quietly detained whilst notice was sent to Captain Lamotte and the French Consul, who had them secured.

We may inform our distant readers, who perhaps never heard of a lorcha until the case of the Arrow was brought before them as the immediate cause of the outbreak at Canton, that they are vessels of 70 to 150 tons; their bottoms are of foreign model generally, their rig unlike that of any other vessel entirely partaking both of Chinese and foreign. The name is most probably a corruption of the Portuguese word, Launcha, a small boat; they were originally Macao built and owned, used as cargo and passage boats, seldom until within the last 10 or 15 years proceeding to sea.

First for their own security, and afterwards for the ostensible protection of Chinese trading vessels and fishing stations against pirates on the coast, they increased their armament and also their capacity. They obtained lucrative charters as convoys by the month or the trip, and for some time their protection was sought and valued by the Chinese. Many respectable merchants and others at Macao owned and fitted them out for that employment. The pirates, however, became more numerous and more daring; they soon not only captured the junks under convoy, but the lorchas also. The prestige of the foreign flag being lost, their occupation was soon gone. Some, when captured, were tempted by pay and share of booty to join their captors. In some cases pirates joined them.

They kept their vessels on the coast, in some cases for years, without rendering any account to the legitimate owners, and became so mixed up in piracy and depravity that they seem to have adopted it as a profession.

Baffling failed in their attempt to monopolize the [illegible] (mare facinus a sea Incenda,) protective trade, they now [illegible] any other from entering into it. This [illegible] of the fights between them and the [illegible] and the French.

The crews consist principally of deserters from ships and the Macao garrison, and are said to be composed more of Portuguese from Europe, the Western Islands, Brazils, and other settlements than from Macao.

Since writing the above, news from Ningpo to the 30th ult. have arrived, when all was quiet. Twenty-four are said to have been killed on the Portuguese side.

Air-tight Ships—Disasters at Sea.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have never heard the question discussed whether a ship at sea, aleak, with air-tight decks and sides, could sink. The decks and sides of vessels are made air-tight for the protection of the freight, as are also those of the hatches. Suppose the rest of the hatches were to be planked over and made water tight, the masts to be cut away, and caulked tightly in the partners, any ports that might be opened, made tight, and, finally, the pumps be plugged up and secured, so that no air could leave from the 'tween-decks, could the ship, under such circumstances, sink? Life-boats are constructed on this principle. Air-tight vessels are fixed under the seats and thwarts. They have no air-tight decks over them. If they had, they would not need the lungs with which they are now provided. No vessel of any description whatever can fill with water unless by the escape of the air contained in it. This, of course, is a very well known fact. The only question is, would a freighted ship, for instance, contain air enough to keep her up after she had filled as much as she could with water? The experiment might be worth trying. The decks, of course, should be relieved of all superfluous weight.

There is another question that is not generally very well understood. It is, that ships can be so freighted as that they cannot be capsized. Loaded toys illustrate this principle. The Turk, with the weight attached to him, may be pressed down on his side, but he will "right" again in an instant. So a ship that has her ballast so secured as that it cannot shift, no matter how far over she is pressed by the wind, will right and maintain her position. You must take care that water does not get below, as it might rest in the bilge or rise so high as to cause a preponderance, in which case of course the ship would turn bottom upwards. Few people will believe you when you say that, under certain circumstances, ships cannot be capsized. And yet it must be obvious to every one that accidents from this most-feared source need never occur if the ballast, or what constitutes the ballast of a ship, be so secured as that it cannot, by possibility, be shifted from its place. HOW MERIT IS REWARDED IN THE BRITISH ARMY.—The military career of Brigadier-General Havelock, who has so recently proved himself a second Clive in India, illustrates the atrocious system that prevails in regard to promotion in the British Army. This gallant officer was born in 1795, and is therefore sixty-two years of age. His rank in the Army is Brevet-Colonel, to which he was promoted in 1851—his position as Brigadier-General being merely temporary. He served as a subaltern for 22 years, 15 of which were passed in India, during which he filled the post of Assistant Adjutant-General in the Burmese war, was present in three general engagements, and when peace was restored, was employed in a diplomatic mission to the Court of Ava. The fact was—and there is no shame in stating it—Havelock was a poor man, and could not purchase his steps. His services might have entitled him to brevet rank; but by the regulations of the service, he could not hold that until he had obtained his company, and so he remained, a thorough soldier, a finished linguist, a skillful diplomatist, a subaltern in the 13th Regiment, during the best years of his life. His subsequent promotion was hardly more rapid, when we take his many and brilliant services into account. He has held several staff appointments, but these do not seem to have helped him as in his profession, as they have done some more lucky, but hardly more deserving officers in late years; and the surprising fact remains, that a man who has shown the highest capacity for independent command is now a plain Colonel at the advanced age of sixty-two. It is impossible to say how many men are similarly or worse situated, or, on the other hand, how many less deserving men have been more fortunate. The career of General Havelock is a sufficient example of the chance which a poor man—however capable and patriotic he may be—has of obtaining rank and distinction in the British Army under existing regulations.

PARIS GOSSIP.

Political Topics of the Day—Death of Manin—Official Recognition of the American Consuls at Alexandria—Adventures of an American Girl in Paris—Marriage in high life—An American Bride.

From our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Wednesday, Sept. 23, 1857.

I am growing incredulous about this stereotyped phrase of "everybody out of town." I think it is a fact manufactured by the pens of our brother chroniqueurs to get an excuse to go themselves to the country, "to follow the stream of fashion" as they say. The Emperor and half the Cabinet, and a few dozen rich families who have country houses and farms, which they wish to inspect, while their harvest is gathering, are absent; but the influx of travelers more than compensates for this loss, (begging his Majesty's pardon,) and it seems to me that the town is more crowded, and certainly more variegated, than at other seasons.

I found, on my return to Paris, after a tour on the continent, that in the political world the important topics of conversation were the Indian rebellion and the approaching Imperial interview at Stuttgardt. Guéraine Planche, the distinguished critic of the Revue des Deux Mondes, to whom Julien Janin declared, at the grave, was the greatest critic of the age, had just died in the Hospital Dubois, at the age of 62. Manin, the friend of Italian liberty, and one of the truest-hearted patriots of the day, was sick in his modest residence of the Rue Blanche, and has since died. He was but 53, and died of disease of the heart. It was Manin that M. Guizot called "the Washington of Italy."

The name of Manin recalls the fortification of Alexandria and the gift of a hundred cannons; and in this connection I have an item to give you. The call for subscriptions for the strengthening of this fort awakened the sympathies of all haters of Austria and of despotism throughout the world, and perhaps no where more than among the refugees of America. One of these, a Milanese, now a resident of Boston and a citizen of the United States, who had been a sufferer from the Austrian dominion in Lombardy, Mr. Leone Corelli, set on foot in Boston a subscription, to which I believe he was much the highest subscriber, for the purchase of a cannon for the fortification of Alexandria.—The cannon was cast, and I am told is a magnificent piece of workmanship, in brass, reflecting great credit on the military artisans of the old Bay State. I saw Mr. Corelli yesterday, and he was all radiant with smiles. He has been to Piedmont, has placed his cannon on the walls of Alexandria. It was officially received by Count Cavour, Minister of Foreign Affairs. Mr. Corelli made his presentation speech, the Count replied with lively expressions of thanks for the present, of compliments for America, and of hatred for Austria, and of promises that if it were ever necessary, it should be the foremost in the battle. Another request of Mr. Corelli was gratified: the gun was pointed toward Austria! His vengeance is accomplished, and he is on his way home with the air of a man who has not only performed a patriotic action, but at the same time has paid a debt that was a burden to him.

The history and adventures of a little American girl now in Paris, have just been recounted to me, and they are so interesting in various aspects, that they ought to be known to the American public. In 1852, and consequently while the passage of the Isthmus of Panama was yet a tedious and difficult journey, the father and mother of this child, then four and a half years old, were crossing the Isthmus on their way to San Francisco. Their names were Ebors. On the journey the mother was thrown from her mule down a precipice and killed before the eyes of her husband and child. The husband received such a shock from this event, that he was seized with the Isthmus fever and remained permanently deranged, and it is thought subsequently died at San Francisco. They had for companions on the Isthmus a French lady, Madame Plant de Marcol, with her husband, who were also going to San Francisco. The child was a beautiful and interesting one, and Madame de Marcol on the voyage had already become much attached to it. She was deeply touched by the child's misfortunes, and with M. de Marcol's consent, became her protector. During two years that she resided in San Francisco, the little girl, by her sweetness of character, wound herself so thoroughly into the affections of the family in which she was residing, that an own child could not have been dearer to them. At this time, M. de Marcol died, and Madame returned to Paris, bringing with her the little girl. Lately, this estimable lady lost the fortune upon which she lived and sustained her adopted child. Her friends, who are in good circumstances, refuse to aid her so long as she continues to impose upon herself the additional and voluntary burden of the stranger's sustenance. Notwithstanding the suffering into which this new position of affairs has thrown her, Madame de Marcol declares herself unable, no matter what calamity may befall her, to separate herself from this child of misfortune and of loveliness. Her health is failing, and she fears that she may die without being able to give her adopted daughter an education. This is, in fact, one of her most lively regrets. These facts, which are well authenticated, came to the ears of the American Minister here, who at once, with his well-known kindness of heart, sent assurances to Madame de Marcol that she should be aided in her laudable wishes in regard to the child's education, the Americans in Paris charging themselves with that duty. Eight hundred francs a year for three years is demanded by the school, and a subscription is in circulation for that purpose. The little girl is now nine and a half years old, and is represented as one of the most lovely children it is possible to meet with.

Another item of American news. On Monday last an American young lady was married at the Palace of Malmaison, and was given away by its occupant, the Ex-Queen Christina, of Spain. The invitations were made in the name of Christina. The young lady who was the recipient of this honor at the hands of the Queen was Miss Isabella Rose, daughter of Mr. James Rose, of New-Orleans, well-known as a patron of the arts, and as the former possessor of one of the copies of Powers' Greek Slave. The bridegroom was Gen. San Ramon, of the Spanish army. Some one informed me that the first acquaintance between the parties was made on that prolific ground for love matches, the Hotel du Louvre, in the course of last winter. But it is much more probable, since Gen. Ramon was formerly connected with the Government of Cuba, and since Mr. Rose was engaged at the same time at Havana in the gas enterprise, by which he gained a considerable proportion of his immense fortune, that the first acquaintance of the newly-married couple dates back to that period.

Lieut. Bonaparte, late of the United States Army, now a dragoon officer of the French Army, has just returned to Paris from the Campaign against the Kabyles, and three days ago the army journal announced his promotion to a captaincy. For a grandson of Prince Jerome, the promotion of this young officer is not very rapid. I know personally a young man who at twenty-three is a captain of the Second Voltigeurs in the Imperial Guard, and carries four decorations on his breast: the Legion of Honor, the Turkish Medjidie, the Cross of St. Ferdinand of Spain, and the Victoria Medal. He has the advantage, however, of having for uncle Marshal Pelissier, whom he served as secretary during the siege of Sebastopol, and as aid-de-camp at the taking of the Malakoff.

But young Bonaparte will hardly complain, since he sees that his cousin, the young Prince Joachim Murat, who is also an American of Bordentown origin, remains still a second Lieutenant of the Guard, although he occupies the important post of Ordonnance Officer to the Emperor, and is charged with the duty of guarding the access to his Majesty's presence. To occupy so important a place as the guard of his Majesty's chamber or office door, to be charged with the duty of deciding who shall or who shall not approach his Majesty's person, Napoleon must have a great affection for him. And yet he remains a second Lieutenant. But then Captain Bonaparte had a first-rate West Point education, while the Prince Murat never had an elementary military education at all.

Horrible Treatment of Sailors on Board Ship—The Case of the Middlesex.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

On Thursday, Feb. 12, the ship Middlesex left Liverpool, arriving at New-York on Wednesday, April 15, 1857. She had a crew of 3 officers, 38 men, a doctor, and a Liverpool pilot. From Saturday, the 14th of February, until within two days of the ship's arrival at this port, the officers kept continually beating, flogging, kicking, and otherwise maltreating the crew with belaying pins and iron pins, so that when the vessel reached port four men had died from the injuries they sustained, and it was found necessary to remove five or six others to hospital on Stilton Island. These were in such a decrepid condition that they had to be carried down the sides of the vessel into a small boat.

The particulars of these outrages were sworn to before the Grand Jury, and they are, substantially, as follows:

First—That on Sunday, March 15th, a seaman named Jones, received forty-five lashes, with a doubled rope, from Lynan the first mate, acting under the Captain's order and superintendence. The seaman was sick at the time, but, nevertheless, was kept tied up for fifteen minutes after the whipping.

Second—That on the same day the second mate, Jones, gave a seaman, named Warren, a savage kick, quite prostrating him.

Third—That the same man, Warren, was, afterwards, terribly beaten by the first mate, Lynan, with a belaying pin.

Fourth—That on the 11th of April, in the presence, and under the direction of the Captain, Lynan, the first mate, attacked a seaman, named Massiah, throwing him down, and trampling on his head and face with the heel of his boot until the victim became motionless and speechless. After the man had revived, the Captain told Lynan to "Go at him again," which he did, and continued his brutal treatment until all the passengers thought Massiah dead.

Fifth—That on the 14th of February Jones, the second mate, after beating Smith, a sailor, sent him to the top of the foremast to catch flies, then to the tip of the bowsprit on the same errand, and finally beat him with a rope, and made him go down upon his face on the forecastle for the purpose of biting an inch out of the deck. The man tried to do this, but, not succeeding, he was again severely beaten.

Sixth—That on the 27th of February, the said Smith, being exhausted and unable to stand, lay down in the steerage, when Jones, the second mate, immediately ferreted him out, beat him unmercifully with a belaying-pin, and afterwards with a rope twice doubled, then shackled him to the pump-handle while at work, and subsequently chained him to another man, both of whom were then sent about their business.

Seventh—That Smith, after receiving other beatings, was wandering about the deck on Sunday, March 1st, in a state of delirium, when Jones seized a belaying-pin and struck him several blows over the head, knocking him down and leaping on him again and again. Jones then put a rope round Smith's neck and the crew dragged him about. After this he was flung down the companion-way, where he remained senseless, but, on again moving, Jones calling out "you are not dead yet, you G—d d—n son of a b—h" caught him by the throat, and held him there until he thought life extinct. On one of the passengers saying, "You have finished that job at last," Jones replied, "I meant to do it." Smith was removed afterwards to a filthy place called the hospital, about five and a half feet long by four wide, in which there were already three others. Smith was unable to eat, his throat being so swollen, and all this time he was still ironed! On the 5th of March Smith was speechless; his face was blank and terribly swollen, and he was covered with wounds. He died at 11 o'clock that morning. On examination after death his head was found to be quite soft, and several of his ribs were broken. He was thrown over into the sea without any ceremony.

There were also three other deaths on board under similar circumstances.

All these facts, and many more, were sworn to before the Grand Jury. Why then did they not find a bill against H. B. Parmalee, master of the Middlesex? Was it because they did not think the evidence sufficient, or the crimes committed on board the ship sufficiently heinous? Did they believe the testimony of the only witness examined; if not, why did they not hear the others who were ready to corroborate his evidence?

Before the witness, here alluded to, had concluded his testimony, several of the Jurors expressed great indignation against the captain of the ship. They said that they required to hear nothing further in order to indict him, and therefore would not examine the three remaining witnesses. The Jury did return a Bill of Indictment against Capt. Parmalee, but at their next sitting they recalled or smothered it, and did not "find it." Why? Justice.

The English Government has started the word "telegram" for telegraph dispatch. A correspondent discusses the propriety thereof and writes: An epigram, a diagram, a monogram, and an anagram—but, an autograph, a lithograph, a photograph, and a telegraph. What is the principle? When the compound denotes the character of the writing, it takes gram; when it denotes the means, it takes graph. In the case of a telegraphic message, the means of transmission are indicated. Therefore the proper word is a telegraph. Do not be misled by the Government "telegram"—an illustration of the proverb, that a little learning is a dangerous thing.

The English papers report a curious case of a legatee of a late millionaire—a legatee to the tune of $100,000—who has gone quite mad in consequence of his good fortune. It is not supposed, however, that any future legatees, even with this warning before their eyes, will have sufficient strength of mind to refuse bequests left to them, but will be prepared to risk the chances of insanity. Exceptions to this rule will not certainly be found in Wall-street just now.

The next news from India, a fortnight later, (per electric telegraph) was actually due on Saturday, the 26th ult., the day the Niagara sailed from Liverpool; but owing to the influence of the South-west monsoon, the force of which is very great and dead against a vessel crossing the Indian Ocean to the Red Sea, it was not believed that the intelligence could reach London before the Tuesday following, in time for the Atlantic, now almost due at this port.

Another Congress has just been held at Vienna—one of dancing masters. It was attended not only by all the principal masters of that city, but by deputations from Prague and Odessa. The object of it was to deliberate on the grave question of the introduction of new figures in dancing, and the Congress, after much anxious reflection, came to the resolution of adopting a new quadrille invented by a dancing master of Prague, of the name of Hooker.

Mr. S. C. Hall, at a meeting at Weymouth for the purpose of raising funds for the sufferers from the Indian mutiny, said, "that he would slaughter a bullock in every Hindoo temple, and a pig in every Mahomedan mosque." In consequence of this, an "Old Indian Officer" writes: "If we desecrate the temples of either of the Mahomedans or Hindoos, we shall raise such a fire in India that not the armed hosts of all Europe could quench."

General Lawrence took the precaution to lay in six months' store of provisions there, and, as it is situated at the banks of the Goutmy, the besieged will not want for water. They are in a position to resist, and wait for reinforcements."

The Sublime Porte has instructed its Ambassador in London to forward to the Lord Mayor the sum of $1,000 as his donation to the Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers by the Mutiny in India. This expression of sympathy, coming from the acknowledged head of the Mahomedan religion, is considered important and significant.

The Rochetta channel at Venice is now so deep that an American merchantman and nine other large ships were able to cross the bar at Malamocco, although the water was two feet lower than usual. South Carolina—Letter from Gen. James Hamilton.

To the Editors of the Charleston Mercury:

An esteemed friend in the interior of the State has called upon me to declare publicly whether, if elected to the Senate of the United States, I would serve. The terms of the call are so kind and complimentary, that delicacy forbids my being instrumental in making it public. The partiality of other friends has also brought my name before the people of South Carolina, in the columns of your paper and the Charleston Courier, as a fit successor to the lamented Butler—a vacancy more easily filled than his place can be adequately supplied.

Believing that the Kansas complication may precipitate on the country a momentous issue, a conjuncture of circumstances may arise, which, in the service of the State, would involve an obligation equally imperative as her defence in case of a public war. To avoid all misconstruction of my position, if the State thinks proper to elect me to the high and honorable post in question, I shall feel it my duty to obey her mandate.

I beg leave, however, to avow, that, regarding the office as one that may be declined, but never solicited, I will, under no circumstances, make myself a candidate. I will solicit no man's vote; I will oppose no man's election. I enter into no canvass, no combination, no confederation with others. I simply stand in a position of entire quiescence and neutrality, ready to obey the unsolicited wishes of the Legislature, if it calls upon me to represent the sovereignty of the South Carolina in the great Council of confederated sovereignty—in which event I will repair to my post with all possible dispatch, prepared with uncompromising zeal and fidelity to promote her interests and sustain her honor. If my past history in connection with the public affairs of South Carolina, at a crisis of intense interest and public peril, gives me no claim to be trusted, then I must submit to the verdict of public sentiment, and remain in a retirement in which I have many private duties to perform, and many sources of contentment to cultivate. I think it due to candor, however, to declare that I have no desire to serve beyond the remaining term of the late incumbent. I should go into the representation of the State under a belief that the issue must come up within the next three years, whether the South can, consistently with her interests and honor, remain in the Union.

This question being pacifically solved, I would then seek a retirement so well suited to my own inclinations, penetrated with a deep and inexpressible feeling of gratitude to my native State, which in times past has lavished upon me so many of her public honors, and what is of far more inappreciable value, much of her public confidence.

I belong to a past generation—to a confederation of men who have passed from the strifes and contentions of this fitful and feverish world, to an immortality of happiness. When I think of those companions of my then comparative youth, and associates in a glorious struggle, "my heart grows liquid as I write, and I could pour it out like water." I hope that I, the humblest of the throng, may be permitted to place a poor garland on their graves. They rise unbidden to my memory in all the strong lineaments of life.

There stands Calhoun, in all the grandeur of his genius and the solidity of his immovable integrity. What inscription of praise does he need beyond the utterance of his name?

There stands Hayne, in all the mild radiance of his character—with an ability of the highest possible compass, with all his transcendent powers for government and administration—pure, spotless and undismayed.

There stands McDuffie, with his robust intellect and stern honesty, exerting powers of analysis and argument which made him one of the first dialecticians of his time, and with a Roman patriotism which burned even in the caverns of the tomb.

There stands Turnbull, whose head was as gigantic as his heart was incorruptible—who, with his fine Grecian face, disclosed the great qualities of the race from which he sprung—burning enthusiasm, intense genius, and unconquerable courage.

There stands Harper, a bright emanation of that intelligence which God confers on the most gifted of his creatures—simple, artless, with a subjugated self-love.

Of the leaders of "the Old Guard," but two of us are left. Preston, and the humble individual who addressed you. Preston, who having been sorely smitten by the hand of infirmity, survives, thank God, in renovated health and usefulness.—It was said by a distinguished cotemporary, that our association contained a great and extraordinary variety of talent—a place for every man, and every man suited to his place; and that no country was ever better prepared for revolution than South Carolina in the efficiency of her public agents. Preston was emphatically an orator, and was the first orator of his time. The variegated richness of his imagination—the purity of his taste—his power of argument, as if he had never cultivated aught but the severe faculty of ratiocination—and over all he flung the drapery of a most attractive modesty, and a private character without reproach. An association with such men, (some, ever humble my station,) each of whom was fitted for empire, is a full measure of honor without my looking further for distinction. If South Carolina is destined for another revolution, may she find such sons ready for her service.

I shall say but little of the present crisis—of the duty it will impose upon our members to Congress—because it might be regarded as a covert artifice of electioneering for an office, which, if it comes at all, must come without solicitation; but I must be permitted to make one declaration. If aggression does not cease, revolution must ensue; but, for one, I must be permitted to declare, give us the Constitution, and as its best commentary, the Government of the Union for the first thirty years after it went into operation, and we are content.

The South should ask for nothing more, and take nothing less, without, indeed, she is basely recreant to herself and her posterity.

There is a sentence in "Junius" full of beauty and wisdom, adapted to the present crisis—"No measures are likely to be sustained with so much firmness as those which are commenced in moderation." We owe this moderation to our allies in the Free States. Think of the earthquake shout of that majority of twenty thousand freemen in the City of New-York, at the last autumnal election, who declared that our institutions were not to be [illegible]

The following is the [illegible]

A Remarkable Case.

A few days since in company with [illegible] a young female, daughter of [illegible] of Horicon, Warren County, N. Y., [illegible] in this region as "the woman that [illegible] for 18 months."

She appears to be entirely [illegible] almost continuous sleep of [illegible] ing. The [illegible] remaining in these positions [illegible] three to five minutes [illegible] they estimated that she went [illegible] tions at least a minute on an average [illegible] seem they gave me reason [illegible] the 26th June, 1856, now about [illegible] There were not less than three [illegible] of these spasms.

The least particle of food taken into her mouth will produce violent heaving and [illegible] handled bread and [illegible] dissed heaving which was attended [illegible] impalpable and [illegible] having food upon her stomach [illegible] least heaving, which lasted [illegible]

The function of [illegible] seems has since entirely ceased about a year ago last June. I hope some of our [illegible] and men of science, will take the trouble to visit this mysterious case, and give us some philosophical [illegible] explanation. I have some more which I have of her case while there, and any person desiring [illegible] which I have in my possession, I shall be glad to furnish him. It is a case which I think deserves investigation for the sake of medical science, and I would suggest, that the physicians who believe in [illegible] medical college [illegible] and report. This should be done immediately, as she cannot live always, although she seems to have the habit of going without eating pretty thoroughly established, and is practicing quite well in [illegible] but breathing. A Californian Lady in Search of the Murderer of her Husband.

From the Cincinnati Commercial, Oct. 6.

We met, yesterday, at the Mount Desert, a lady who has exhibited the most indefatigable perseverance in the pursuit of information [illegible] sing difficulties. The [illegible] forts, which State, in fact, she [illegible] residence, and have [illegible] named Munson—a pleasing, cool, [illegible] who so adroitly worked his way into her confidence that she intrusted him to a young lady [illegible] dear friend; possessed of some [illegible] and dollars in cash. The result, as [illegible] anticipated, was the consummation of the [illegible] heartless wishes—the marriage of her friend [illegible] polygamous gentleman.

A few months rolled round, and everything passed off smoothly enough. The husband was [illegible] and attentive; the lady all love and confidence. Finally, the husband expressing a wish to settle [illegible] business and settle down for life, the [illegible] draw from her property to the value of [illegible] tune and placed it in his hands. A week [illegible] steamer sailed for the Atlantic ports, and the [illegible] husband departed with the gold, leaving the [illegible] victim to deplore the loss of a great [illegible] and too busy to look after individual wrongs in which they have no personal or pecuniary interest.

The lady who had brought about the [illegible] and boldly faced her responsibility in the [illegible] and on the sailing of the next [illegible] steamer, she took passage for New-York, determined to follow the betrayer of her confidence, and [illegible] of a wife, to the bounds of civilization, and bring him to punishment. Arrived in New-York, she [illegible] of his footsteps, followed him over [illegible] until she tracked him to a village in [illegible] where she found him with another [illegible] had been married before going to California [illegible] rant was issued for his arrest for bigamy, and [illegible] no proofs of his second marriage, and [illegible] mation, he was discharged.

Nothing daunted by this unfavorable [illegible] of affairs, the lady immediately returned to [illegible] procured the necessary affidavits [illegible] son's marriage there, (together with evidence [illegible] fact of his having abandoned wife and [illegible] Atlantic side in consequence of their [illegible] And that search she has prosecuted now for [illegible] three months with the most determined and [illegible] perseverance; but time for without success. He has left the village

Last night I saw the Summer rise
And leave the fields, where, all the day,
Sick, moving with the reapers, sang
A cheerful harvest roundelay;
Or where the tall oak all night awake,
Lest foes should come her wealth to take,
Stands as one who strives to stay,
And yet resisting, all in vain,
As if some evil wound his vein
Sapped her, like a wizard chain,
And dragged her on to where he stood,
Within the blackness of the wood.

[illegible] the verge—I heard a shriek!
The moon rose rounding from the trees:
The moan! It seemed the Summer's soul,
In glory waiting up the breeze,
To gaze again o'er hill and dell,
And see if all were faring well.
The Summer's soul from Heaven gazed;
From out the forest came a form,
Bedraggled with blood, and strong to bear
The sin and hail and sleety storm,
And to stand the fields, with guilty eyes
Wide—Ad, now shrinking from the skies.

Who knows I find the Autumn here?
He smiles and pathos with a song;
And sing to soothe a sense of wrong,
And gather nuts and fruit and grain,
He gathers, sings, and smiles in pain.
And thou, who thus, from yonder cloud,
Dost sigh thy sorrow down the wind,
To see thy loved ones, into hands
Which know thy blood, awhile resigned,
Do things to make thy ears, keep thy sighs—
Thy fox will need them, ere he dies.

Not for himself he binds these sheaves,
Not for himself he climbs to shake
These nuts and fruits upon the ground,—
Already see the farmers take
And heap them up in bags and bin,
Where he may never enter in!
Not this alone. The very flowers
And grass will crisp beneath his tread,
The birds avoid him all the day,
The streams before him creep in dread,
And Heav'n itself, in deep disdain,
Smite in his face with sleet and rain.

And when, at last, he seeks the woods,
To creep away and die unseen,
The noble trees, which saw his crime,
Will scorn his guilty head to screen,—
Will rather each his robe unbind,
And fling its splendor on the wind.

So, gentle Summer, save thy sighs,—
Preserve them for thy wretched foe,
Where he shall weep and beat his breast,
And wander, groaning, to and fro,
And pray the hail may soon have birth,
Which fails to beat him in the earth.

Miss Juliana May.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

This young American artist has just given two concerts in New-York, and has thus enabled the public to institute a comparison between herself and the distinguished artistes which Europe has hitherto furnished for our lyrical stage. At both of these concerts Miss May was welcomed by a fashionable and discerning audience, composed of many of the most distinguished citizens of New-York, by whom she was greeted with much enthusiasm and great good feeling. This was, doubtless, in some degree, due to the circumstance of the respectable social position of the fair recipient and the natural anxiety felt for the success of an American lady who had the courage to compete with the best talent in one of the most difficult branches of art, but much more to the success which attended her efforts.

As Miss MAY is now fairly a candidate for the public favor, it may be proper to institute a comparison between herself and those great artistes upon whose merits a tolerably fair critical opinion has been constructed.

It is generally admitted that Miss MAY possesses a rich and musical voice, of great flexibility and considerable power, but what its particular qualities are, and how far it will enable her to achieve the position which she felt country-woman one might desire for her, are subjects of discussion. The words to which operatic music is set being for the most part in the Italian language, the performers upon our own stage, imagining with great propriety that the audience are unacquainted with the language, pass over the narrative or recitative, which is generally regarded as a very important part of the opera upon an Italian stage, with but little effort, and reserve their chief force for the airs, whose exquisite beauty finds a ready response in the hearts of the listeners of every country, although they may be entirely unacquainted with the words, or even the sentiment, except in so far as it guides forth in the rich conceptions of the musical composer. These are the points upon which a singer of operatic music must rely when a novelty upon an American stage, or he falls altogether, and it consequently happens that whatever power of voice the artist has is reserved for those parts of the opera, while the beautiful recitative, which requires much force of voice, is not unfrequently slurred over, without comment on the part of the audience.

As an illustration of this, let us cite the performance of Madame LA GRANGE in "Ernani," and FAZZOLARI in "Lucia di Lammermoor," which are given because of the high position of both these artistes. In the former of these the chief power of Madame LA GRANGE was displayed in "Ernani Involami," and the great tenor, Signor ERNESTO MARIO, and in the latter in "Fra gl'Incanti." Whether this is due to the circumstance that the chief singers in opera upon the American stage depend upon their previous reputation to sustain them, or with advanced years it becomes more difficult to render correctly the whole opera, we will not pretend to say; but certain it is that the recitatives are generally executed upon our own stage in such a manner as would never be tolerated upon a European one.

Miss MAY, who is gifted by nature with a naturally full and powerful voice, has sought to execute the parts she has presented in her two concerts precisely as they were originally intended to be sung by the composers, without any of the ornate additions which older artists frequently indulge in. As an example, let us cite the cavatina, "Di Piacer," in ROSSINI'S "La Gazza Ladra," and MEYERBEER'S romanza, "Ye, dei Elle," as given in the first concert; and "Oh! Amo a Quest' Anima," from "Linda di Chamounix," and "Marie, Jeune Amies," from VERDI'S "Vespri Siciliani." It cannot be denied that in each of these exquisite and very difficult compositions, abounding in modulations and transitions, Miss MAY acquitted them with exactness and truth.

Texas Items.

Gen. TWIGGS, the Commanding-General of the Texas Department, has issued an order explaining the course he has been compelled to take with reference to the late disturbances in the West. The order is as follows:

"The General commanding the Department finds, with great regret, the necessity for having an escort with the emigrant's train transporting stores for the troops from Indianola to this city. The recent attack on the Government train in Karnes County, Texas, where one man was killed and four wounded, by persons in disguise, seems, however, imperatively to call upon him to protect the trains in future, to prevent the delay of stores for the frontier posts. A detail will, therefore, be made from Company M, 1st Artillery, consisting of one subaltern, two sergeants, and twenty privates, to escort the train from this city to Powder Horn and back."

The camels and dromedaries, imported by the Government some year ago, into this State, for the purpose of trying the experiment how they would answer the purpose on our great American deserts or in the extreme west of the State, have proven eminently successful, and come up to the full expectations of all. At last accounts they were on their journey, heavily laden, to the extreme frontier of New-Mexico. All are now satisfied that the importation of camels was no chimerical idea, as was anticipated, but a wise, judicious and economical scheme, reflecting credit on the originators of the plan. There are now employed eighteen dromedaries and thirty-two camels, on the frontier. The climate agrees with them admirably, and but few accidents by disease or otherwise, have occurred.

The Children's Aid Society.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Mr. TRACY, under the auspices of the New-York Children's Aid Society, has, if we are rightly informed, brought into this State, where they have been supplied with comfortable homes, over three hundred houseless and extremely poor children and youths of New-York City. Of this number, not to accent a dozen—we have not heard of the half of that number—have turned out badly. When we remember that these children are the outcasts, in many cases, of drunken and debauched parents, that they have spent the brief portion of their life, which had passed at the East, in extreme poverty and companionship with vice, it is remarkable that so small a proportion of them are guilty of criminal conduct. We incline to the opinion that the conduct of 300 boys and girls of similar age taken from the lowest classes of our own cities and villages, would not have a more encouraging exhibit.

In our judgment, the Children's Aid Society is worthy of a large share of popular encouragement. It has piled up no expensive buildings; a few rooms at a moderate rent suffice its wants. It neither consumes its donations in high salaries to useless officers, in monstrous printing-bills, nor in any other way merely incidental to its work. But it employs all its funds for the reformation of homeless, idle and vicious children. It goes into the streets, where these children can be found, and by various arts induces them to accept its benevolent offices. It finds employment and homes for all it can at the East, and it is only the occasionally recurring surplus we receive at the West.

Our Martyred Missionaries in India.

From the New-York Observer.

The last ray of hope has been dispelled by the late arrival of news from India, and we must now record, with feelings of the profoundest sorrow, that there is every reason to believe the four missionary families of the Presbyterian Board at Futtehgurh have perished in the massacre. They have been traced to the vicinity of Cawnpore, and it was hoped that when Gen. HAVELOCK arrived there, he would find them alive, and rescue them from the insurgents, but he reports but one white person as saved, and her name is given; so that the painful fact is pressed upon our hearts that our brethren and sisters, our dear friends FREEMAN, and CAMPBELL, and JOHNSON, and MCMULLEN, and their wives, and two children of Mr. and Mrs. CAMPBELL, have fallen victims to the awful insurrection in India.

Rev. JOHN E. FREEMAN went out in 1838, and has been a faithful missionary for about 19 years. He married Miss BEACH, in Newark, N. J., who died about ten years ago. Mr. F. afterwards married a valued friend of ours, Miss VERDENBURG, a lady of great accomplishments and worth, with a large circle of friends in this city and New-Jersey.

Rev. DAVID A. CAMPBELL was from Wisconsin, and his wife from Ohio.

Rev. ALBERT O. JOHNSON and wife are both from Western Pennsylvania.

Rev. ROBERT E. MCMULLEN was from Philadelphia, and his wife was Miss FERGUSON, from Paterson, N. J. All of them were among the most able and useful missionaries of the Board, and their loss is a blow to the work, compared with which the destruction of $100,000 worth of property in India is not to be mentioned. These houses and presses and churches can be rebuilt, but who will be baptized for the dead?

COAST SURVEY.—From the printed directions in regard to the operations of the Coast Survey for the years 1857 and 1858, it appears that extensive preparations have been made for the continuance of the great work. This includes primary and main triangulations and astronomical and magnetic observations and reconnaissances. Within the scope of operations are the State of Maine, eastward and northward; the Chesapeake; North Carolina; the coast of South Carolina and Georgia; Florida Keys; Mississippi Sound; Atchafalaya Bay and approaches; the coast of Texas; the coast of California; the coast of Oregon and Washington Territories; and the triangulations for connecting the islands of Santa Barbara channel with the coast. Also, to be continued, the collection of data for ascertaining the difference of longitude between well-determined European observatories and points upon our coast; the observations for differences of longitude by the electro-magnetic telegraph; the investigation for longitudes, and the computations of the chronometer expedition for difference of longitude between Cambridge and Liverpool. Secondary and other triangulations and observations are connected with the above-mentioned work, and include topographical and hydrographic operations.

The drawing of charts and sketches is to be continued. The number of them is nearly sixty. Upward of one hundred charts and sketches will be, or now are, in the hands of engravers.

In connection with the office are electrotyping and printing operations, requiring, in all its departments, gentlemen of profound science, artists, mechanics, clerks, and various persons in subordinate capacities.—Union.

SAD ACCIDENT NEAR BOSTON LIGHT—ONE MAN DROWNED.—Last evening, about 8 o'clock, as the steamer Niagara was entering Boston harbor, she came in collision with the Orleans packet-schooner Henrietta Maria, Capt. SAML. SMITH, from Boston, bound home, sinking her in a very few minutes. Boats were promptly sent from the steamer to the assistance of the passengers, and they were all rescued excepting one man, named DANIEL HIGGINS, belonging in Orleans, who could not be found. The officers of the Niagara state that the schooner was "dodging about" fully fifteen minutes before the collision, which occurred in consequence. They also state that the captain and mate of the schooner were the first to clamber on board the Niagara, leaving the passengers, six of whom were women, to save themselves. The names of those saved are Jonathan Higgins, Elisha Hopkins, Jonathan Young, Rev. Mr. Atkinson, Jesse Sparrow, Josiah Knowles and wife, Jesse C. Snow and Jesse C. Snow, Jr., all of Orleans; Mrs. Lucy Snow and daughter, and Henry Knowles, of Eastham; Solomon Crosby, steward; Sylvanus Freeman, seaman, and David King. They saved nothing but what they stood in.—Boston Journal, 9th.

The Methodist mission among the Swedes at the West is prospering. Nearly 700 members are enrolled.

DECISIONS.

William Sharp vs. Augustus W. Whipple.—Motion granted in part, without costs.

Bogardus vs. Barrett.—Like decision.

Considerant vs. Brisbane.—Order affirmed, with costs.

McKeon vs. Adames.—Order allowing defendant to set up negligence of fraud in performance of any of the services for which this action is brought. No costs of appeal.

Pennington vs. Browder.—Case stricken from the calendar.

APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURTS—THE PRACTICE SETTLED.

Noah S. Day vs. Conrad Schenckhamer.—The plaintiff moved to dismiss an appeal to the Superior Court from a judgment rendered against the defendant in the District Court of the First Judicial District of the City of New-York. The judgment was rendered in June, 1857.

The plaintiff contended that the Superior Court had no jurisdiction of the appeal. That although such jurisdiction had been conferred by an act passed on the 16th of April, 1857, it was taken away and restored by the Common Pleas, by an act amending (among others) § 265 of the code, passed on the 17th of April, 1857.

The defendant opposed the motion, and contended that, under the 73d Rule, these Supreme Court has jurisdiction of appeals from these courts, and that the Common Pleas has jurisdiction of appeals from judgments rendered by such justices in special proceedings where the amount in controversy exceeds $50 in a case, such as judgments in summary proceedings to recover the possession of land, and perhaps in some other special proceedings.

Judge Bosworth announced the decision of the Court that the appeal must be dismissed. He stated that the judges of the Common Pleas and of the Superior Court deemed the question so important to suitors as to render it expedient that they should confer together, and have full consultation in relation to it. That they had met together and fully examined the subject, and had come to the conclusion that the act of the 17th of April, 1857, amending the code, in effect abrogates so much of the 73d section of the act of the 13th of April, 1857, (Chap. 344) as gave to the Superior Court power to entertain appeals from judgments rendered by a justice of the District Courts of this City, and conferred that power on the Common Pleas.

He also stated that he was authorised by all the judges of both courts to state their concurrence in this conclusion.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judge Roosevelt.

THE NEW BALLOT BOXES, AND WHO IS TO PAY FOR THEM.

The People ex rel. S. C. Jollie vs. The Police Commissioners.—An alternative mandamus was granted in this case, directing the defendants to pay the plaintiff the sum of $18,000 for 1,200 globular glass ballot boxes furnished by him to the Board, or to show cause to the contrary. The case was brought up on Saturday. The defendants admit the facts, but assert that the charge is a county expense, and should be made to the Board of Supervisors. The matter was adjourned until Monday, when this point will be argued.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judge Brady.

P. J. Candau, vs. George Bradshaw and Patrick Bonner.—Judgment for Defendants, on demurrer with costs.

The Union F. I. Co., vs. Isaac J. Dittenhofer.—Order of reference to John D. Burchard, Esq.

Daniel Griffin, vs. Louis S. Robbins.—Order of reference to Livingston Livingston, Esq.

Leopold Lechner vs. Miss Berliner.—Motion denied, but without prejudice to renew.

Eugene Kelstone vs. John Plenfield.—Motion granted.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS—Oct. 10.

Before Justices Osborn and Wood.

There is a class of low criminals who come like a chronic affliction to the Court of Special Sessions. They make their appearance before the bar periodically, receive their sentence, go into prison or perhaps quite as often are discharged and sent forth to mingle with the community until some new crime names their rearrest. The Judges have before them, while disposing of the calendar, a list of these old offenders, furnished each day by Mrs. Foster, the matron of the City Prison, and so they know pretty well when these customers are brought before them what round upon the ladder of crime each has attained. Judge OSBORN the other day had a man brought before him in the Police Court, charged with a petty offence, and after a hearing concluded not to hold him. The man went off and in a few minutes returned with a chair which he had stolen from a store across the street, and sitting down in it, "There, Judge," said he, "I've stolen this chair and now you'll have to send me up." Then will be plenty of such houseless fellows about this Winter, to whom a lodging place on Blackwell's Island will be a luxury.

Margaret Morris and Anne Gillespie were prosecuted at the suit of John Moore. John said he and his wife were staying at a German lodging-house in which these women were employed, and that they stole $60 from him there and (Oct. 8) then. The prisoners said the complainant was intoxicated on the occasion referred to, and that the money was given them by him. They were discharged.

Ann Elwood and Mary Ann Gibson were sent up for two months for stealing a blanket from Jacob Well, Sept. 30.

Mary Ann Smith, with an infant in her arms, and penitence depicted on her countenance, came to the bar and acknowledged that she stole a piece of broadcloth, value $15, from Seth C. Bennet, Oct. 8. Judge Wood—You got a husband? Prisoner—(sobbing) Yes, Sir. Oh, Sir, please to let me go. I'll never do such a nasty, dirty thing again, if you'll only let me go this time. Judge Wood—Have you got any children? Prisoner—Oh, yes, Sir. Spare me for me little children; I'll never do such a nasty trick again; indeed I won't, Sir; I never was here before. Judge Wood—You've been here once before. Prisoner—Not for that, Sir. Judge Wood—Well, what then? Prisoner—I was accused of passing a counterfeit ten cent piece. Judge Wood—Where are your children? Prisoner—I don't know, Sir, unless the neighbors have got them. Judge Osborn—We don't know whether she's lying or not—might give her a couple of months. Mr. Beale, agent of the State Prison Discipline Society, pleaded hard for the woman's discharge. "Oh, think of the little children Judge; no one to take care of them. Judge Osborn—Well, remand her till Tuesday.

Thomas Hickey stole some stair rods, Oct. 9. Geo. Reynolds was the complainant. Judge Osborn—How did you come to take these stair-rods, Thomas? Prisoner—I was drunk, Sir, and didn't know what I did. The complainant said the prisoner was found asleep at the foot of the stairs in his house, with a bottle of brandy by his side, and the stair-rods, which had all been taken from the stairs, lying in a bundle near him. Judge Wood—Well, he's not a very dangerous thief, any way. He was sent to the Penitentiary for three months.

William Sherman was charged with stealing 28 cents in copper coins from Christian Fotz. "Ah, Judge," said his counsel, "it wasn't much." "I don't care," said Judge OSBORN, "if it had been 2,800 cents it would have been the same, I guess." He was sent up for two months.

James Gilroy was accused of stealing a dress, value $4, from George Saunders, Oct. 7. Judge Wood—Did you take it, Mr. Gilroy? Prisoner—Yes, I was left without food all day, and I took it to raise money on it to buy food with. Judge Wood—I let you out the other day, and you promised to go to work. That's the way you go to work, is it? He was discharged.

James Sears was sent to the Penitentiary for two months for an assault and battery committed upon his wife Mary, Oct. 5.

John Taylor, charged with stealing a tub of butter, worth $11, Oct. 8, from John C. Ludlow, was discharged for want of sufficient evidence.

Christopher Evans had beaten his wife Jane, Oct. 8. Judge Osborn—Has he ever beat you before? Witness—Yes, Sir. Judge Osborn—Often? Witness—Yes, Sir. Judge—Badly? Witness—Not so bad before; I don't want him punished, Sir, if he'll support me and not treat me so any more. Judge Osborn, (to the prisoner)—Will you support her and take good care of her? Prisoner—Oh, yes, Sir; I'll go on me knees to support her, Sir; yes, Sir. Judge Osborn—Well, see that you do. You may go. Prisoner—Thank you, Sir, and long may you live, Sir. Judge Osborn, (abstractedly)—"And long may you live, Sir." That'll add two years to my life at least.

Christopher Sheiden, a boy, assaulted and beat another boy, Oct. 8. Daniel Sheiden complained of him. The proprietor of the segar store, in which the prisoner lived, testified to his bad character. Judge Wood—Have you known this boy long? Witness—Yes, sir. Judge Wood—Did this happen in front of your place? Witness—Three years, sir. Judge Wood—No, did this occurrence take place in front of your store? Witness—Yes, sir. The prisoner was found guilty, and sentence suspended. Judge Wood—You mustn't take hold of little boys so fierce.

James Robinson and Henry Mandy, both boys, were charged with stealing 12 breast-pins, Oct. 8, from Madeline Hohlman. Judge Osborn—That is a bad beginning for those boys. It was stated that Robinson was the least to blame. Judge Osborn—I don't see how you're going to make fish of the one and flesh of the other, for my part. Robinson was finally discharged, and Mandy remanded.

Patrick Grogan came to the bar with a blackened eye. Caleb Tompkins deposed that he was called up at 4 o'clock A. M., Oct. 7, and told that some one was in his house; he found the prisoner creeping about on his hands and knees, having in his possession $5 worth of wearing apparel, which he had just taken; the prisoner, on seeing him, started, and the complainant, though in his night-clothes, accoutered as he was, pursued him; he overtook him in the street, and knocked him down, and two ice-men, coming by at the moment, gave him in charge to them, and went for an officer, who finally took the prisoner to the Station-house. He was sent up for three months.

John Thompson, a negro, had stolen a roll of flannel from William Robinson, Oct. 8. Judge Osborn—Thompson, you're an old thief. We find you guilty of this larceny, and sentence you to the Penitentiary for six months. We'll get some of these fellows in a second offence bye-and-bye, and then they'll catch it. (A second offence of this kind is punishable with imprisonment in the State Prison.)

Edward Dwyer was in the habit of beating his wife Ann, and gave her a flogging, Oct. 4. Liquor made him lick her, and the more he'd liquor the more he'd lick her. Prisoner—Your Honor, I'll never take another glass of liquor again. Judge Osborn—Well, you promise that you won't drink any more and won't beat your wife again. Prisoner—Yes, sir; another drop will never pass my lips again. Sentence was suspended, and Edward and Ann went off lovingly together.

Thomas McGuire and some other boys, George Burlinson said, hit him in the back and elsewhere with stones. The complainant thought McGuire was not so much to blame as some of the others, and upon his representation sentence was suspended.

Moses Allen and Benjamin Bailey, of No. 26 River-street, Paterson, N. J., left their horses and wagons in the same stable overnight. In the morning, Oct. 10, Allen harnessed up, and somehow or other put the harness and traces, value $5, belonging to Bailey's harness, upon his horse, and then drove off. Bailey had him arrested on a charge of petit larceny. The Court discharged him.

Elizabeth McGrath was arraigned on a charge of stealing a silver lever watch worth $25, from Jacob Johnson, at No. 100 Cherry-street, Oct. 6. Judge Osborn—What have you got to say? Prisoner—I got to say that he took a woman up stairs for $5, and the other girls and I went up stairs, and a lot of rowdies went up, and when we came down I came last, and he charged me with stealing the watch—the bloody old thief of h—ll. Judge Osborn—We find you guilty and sentence you to the Penitentiary for six months. Thomas Donovan stole a set of harness, the property of George Shields, at Hoboken, and brought it to this City, Oct. 7. Joseph Moore was the complainant. He tried to sell it in Chatham-street, but soon after making the attempt was arrested. Judge Osborn—This being your first offence, Donovan, we sentence you to the Penitentiary for two months.

Charles Waters and John Langtell slept in the same room at a hotel, Oct. 4, and Waters stole from his room-mate $10 in bank bills and gold and silver coins. His excuse was that he was going to Charleston for his health, which was very bad. "Ah," said Judge Osborn, "if we let him off, Langtell will be stealing some more money to go to Charleston with. Counsel—But he's got the consumption, sir. Judge Osborn—I guess we shall have to send him to the Island. He'll have a private attention paid him up there if he's sick. Counsel—Why, Sir, it's very healthy up there. Judge Osborn—We find him guilty, and sentence him to the Penitentiary for two months.

Henry Robinson, on a complaint of petit larceny, made by William H. Olmer, committed Oct. 8, was sent up for two months.

Mike Mullins was found guilty of an assault and battery upon John F. Baker, Sept. 29, and sentence suspended.

HIDES—Mr. H. D. HULL, broker, says: "A few sales for export comprise the whole of our week's business. There is scarcely any market, and quotations are nominal. There is no disposition on the part of the trade to purchase, as they are not willing to increase their liabilities during the present financial revulsion. Importers do not manifest any disposition to press off their stocks except for cash, which is now impossible to obtain. The low rates for Exchange restrict inquiry for export. Tanners have either suspended manufacturing entirely or are slowly working in the stock which remained on hand at the commencement of the season. Receipts for the week are light, embracing 26,560 from foreign ports as follows: 14,825 Montevideo, ⅌ Lovett Pecock; 9,702 Vera Cruz, ⅌ Wildfire; 1,600 Valparaiso, ⅌ Almeda, 24 Rio Hache, ⅌ *R. Expected to arrive shortly at this port: The Ellen Morrison, from Montevideo, with 6,500 hides; the Amanda, from Rio Grande, with 8,000 hides; the Samuel Churchman, from Buenos Ayres, with 6,000 hides; the Hansa, from Buenos Ayres, 6,000 hides; the Amazon, from Montevideo, with 14,000 hides; the Ann, from Orinoco, with 5,000 hides; the ..., from Truxillo, with 5,000 hides; the ..., from Savanilla, with 3,000 hides; the Lucerne, from Gambia, with 12,000 kips. LEATHER—Mr. HULL states that "the receipts have been large, and with meagre sales the stock continues to accumulate. Eastern manufacturers have for the most part suspended operations and are almost entirely bare of stock. The difficulty of procuring exchange from the West restricts the demand from that quarter. But little can be done until financial affairs take a favorable turn." portunity of deciding again whether she will remain in the Federal Union "with honor" or not.

We confess we do not understand General HAMILTON's fine rhetoric on this subject. Kansas is to present herself for admission as a State, with such a Constitution as her people may adopt; and we do not very well see how General HAMILTON, or anybody else, can object to her admission, provided her people are allowed a fair chance to decide for themselves what sort of a Constitution they will have. It will probably prohibit Slavery,—but this is a matter with which South Carolina has no more concern than Massachusetts would have with a popular decision on the other side. The national Administration is fully committed to the doctrine of popular sovereignty, and it is only by fully and fairly redeeming its pledges upon this subject that it can retain the support which placed it in power. South Carolina has no right to complain of this. She claims justly complete and entire control over her domestic institutions, and she must concede the same right to Kansas.

We do not believe Gen. HAMILTON will be called on to take part in any such revolution as he apprehends. His duties will be less arduous and more agreeable than he fears. Kansas will not create a crisis, nor give South Carolina any provocation or opportunity for deciding that she cannot remain in the Federal Union. When her people, properly and fairly represented, shall have framed a Constitution and given it their approval, there will not be a dozen votes in the Senate against her admission as a State. Gen. HAMILTON's brilliant oratory will find in that body some more agreeable theme than the disruption of our Confederacy.

Who Spends the Money?

The women of America have of late been paying the penalty of their position. From the extreme of obsequious gallantry in regard to them, we are passing to the opposite excess of vituperative injustice. We are treating them, in fact, very much as the African savage treats his Fetish. In the times of our prosperity, we could not sufficiently adulate these lovely and omnipotent beings. We could refuse them nothing. The best seats at hotel tables, the only seats in railway cars, the decencies of the steamboat deck, and the decorum of the steamboat supper were alike reserved for them. We exacted of our Police only one duty, to escort our wives and daughters daintily through the perils of the streets—and we expected of all men only one virtue, that of an almost servile courtesy to the ladies. But adversity has overtaken us, and all is changed. The pretty creatures of yesterday are the "extravagant syrens" of to-day. Miss Flora McFlimsey is the type of her thoughtless and treacherous sex, and the piteous cry of "nothing to pay," which comes up from all the desperate debtors of the land, we declare to be but the echo of the iniquitous female complaint of "nothing to wear." The argument of this alteration in the tone of the men is not a new one. It is as old, indeed, as the troubles of "gardener Adam and his wife." The man has got himself into a scrape, and the woman must be his excuse. She was born to be his "help-meet," and if she can't save him from the consequences of his folly, at least he may throw on her shoulders the blame. Whose fault it is, by the way, that those lovely shoulders so often need something thrown on them, he does not, in his flurry of selfish concern, particularly pause to inquire. There let the blame fall, and rest if it may.

Now we do not pretend to deny that certain classes of women in America have of late years been living to dress, to drive and to dance. We do not pretend to deny that an order of frivolous females has flowered out of the soil of this New World, remarkable among the simpletons of the earth for an exclusive development of all sorts of extravagant faults. We do not pretend to deny that the vulgar aims and the vulgar ambitions of reckless and money-seeking men have been fairly matched among us by the equally vulgar aims and the equally vulgar ambitions of reckless and money-spending women. But we do deny most emphatically that the women of America, or that the women of New-York, are as a body liable to the charge of recklessness and extravagance, or as a body responsible in any appreciable degree for the present calamities of the financial and the commercial world. This very City of Gotham, whereof the name is a synonym throughout the land for all manner of gorgeous follies, and costly absurdities and expensive immoralities, teems at this moment with quiet, loving, sincere and honorable women, who regulate their own households, and share with their husbands the anxieties of his industrious career, and lighten by their counsel as well as by their sympathy the burdens of his perplexing affairs. Hundreds and thousands of these women there are, and in every rank of life, in the circles of fashion as well as in the homes of mechanic toil, whom the trials of this critical season will find as the trials of prosperity have found them—"Nobly planned, to warn, to comfort and command."

As the skies darken, as the need of retrenchment makes itself more sharply and more universally felt, as one luxury after another must be put down by the opulent, and one comfort after another sacrificed by the merely well-to-do, this truth will be nobly vindicated in a thousand households. No man who knows the sex and their ways will doubt that the Cashmere will be relinquished, to say the least, quite as cheerfully as the "Morgan horse," and that Mrs. Smith will find it quite as easy to countermand her soirée as Mr. Smith to resign his membership at the Club. The statistics of the Past on this subject are eloquent enough to be of some use, perhaps, to those who doubt about the Future, and who tremble afresh for Wall-street whenever they think of Fifth-avenue.

It has become a common-place of misogynist declamation, for instance, to aver that the "excessive importations of superfluous goods from foreign countries," to which a certain set of economists chooses to trace our present disorders, have been provoked by the extravagance of our women. Crinolines and moes, gloves and feathers, fans and furbelows, kick-shaws and gewgaws, these have ruined us! These have drained us of our Western wheat and our Californian gold, to give us in return only hotel flirtations and watering-place polkas. Let us see how this matter stands. For the fiscal year 1856-6, the importations of silk goods into this country amounted to $22,200,551. Truly a "parlous" sum and a tremendously effective figure of speech for a "sermon on the times" or a lecture on the ladies. But statistics are like puddings; the proof of their value is only to be got at by discussion. Out of these millions of dollars worth of silk, there are certain masculinities to be deducted. We must abstract therefrom all the sleeve and skirt-linings of some four millions of male coats, all the cravats and waistcoats of silk that the American men from Maine to California contrive in a twelvemonth to consume, remembering when we make the sum, that the "black satin waistcoat" may almost be considered as a "national costume" in certain portions of our beloved country; all the mystical ribbons and aprons of all the Orders and Lodges which swarm in the land; all the flags and banners in which we Americans so extravagantly delight, together with such silken vanities in the way of cushions and curtains, &c., as are common to both sexes. Allowing less than two and a quarter millions for all these things, we have a total of twenty-three millions of dollars spent by our women in silks. Is this extravagant? At an average of two dollars per yard in price, the quantity of silk thus represented would be eleven and a half millions of yards, equal, as a reasonable young lady assures us, to a million of silk dresses made very moderately. Now there were in the United States in 1850, just 3,868,427 houses occupied by free persons. Of these houses, it is a low estimate to assume that 1,500,000 were tenanted by families whose incomes averaged $1,000 per annum. We have, therefore, the proof before us, that out of 1,500,000 households whose resources would certainly justify the expense, only two-thirds can possibly have indulged themselves in the purchase of a single silk dress during the years 1856-7.

Again, our importation of gloves in the same time amounted to $1,844,550. This comprises the value of gloves of all kinds and sizes, and if we limit the men and children to the $844,550, it gives us just a single million of dollars spent upon the defence and ornament of the eight millions of white hands upon which six millions of adult male lips kept constantly swearing fealty for twelve long months. Thread laces are certainly in modern times a purely female gaud, though the legend still survives in this City of a gentleman whose nuptial garments were made beauteous with borders of point; and thread laces are costly. Yet in 1856-7 our account for this trivially rose only to $410,591, against a purely masculine expenditure of $576,485 for fancy foreign fire-arms! Much was said last year of the female expenditure in furs, but the remorseless tables of the Treasury set off against $605,607 of garment furs $1,755,704 imported by masculine hatters. The embroideries of the year constitute a serious item, rising to $4,604,853, but it is perhaps as well that no observations thereupon should be indulged by us, who spent at the same time $4,754,682 in cigars and foreign smoking tobacco, and who must bear pretty largely the responsibility of disbursing over $7,500,000 for foreign wines and spirits.

Our space forbids us from pushing these comparisons so far as they might with advantage be carried. It would be unprofitable, for example, to dwell upon the fact that the total amount of our expenditure for foreign luxuries of all kinds during the year 1855-6 does not reach the sum of $50,000,000, while our national income from the rated property of the country, if calculated at 6 per cent., rose during the same period to $422,295,750. But the figures which we have given may at least suffice to satisfy the most captious and the most querulous of the sons of Adam that when he rails upon the women as the cause of his troubles he is only "darkening counsel by words without knowledge," and contributing a new element of stupidity and misconception to that confusion of ideas which is the most dangerous as well as the most humiliating feature of our present national crisis.

The Consequences.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the possible contingency of a general suspension of the Banks of the City and State of New-York, what is to become of them under the constitutional prohibition against legalizing the act? How will they manage with their depositors, and what are the people to do for a currency? Again: What is to be the ordinary money standard of trade and exchange in such case? W.

In the first place, the contingency, we trust, is remote. The Banks will pay out to the last dollar, or as far as the aggregate reserve is susceptible of mutual division through the Clearing-House. In paying down to two, three or five millions, the line of undrawn deposits must fall to about forty millions. Of this, at least ten or fifteen millions will belong to the bank debtors and country bank accounts. The remaining $25,000,000 will belong to parties owing nothing to the banks—not so much, if you please, as good will. This amount would have to be adjusted on the best terms that could be made with each depositor. The ordinary money standard would be made the State and City Bank-Note Circulation. The future deposits at bank would have to be entered and the checks drawn and paid against them as in current funds. The old depositor would have a claim for the market difference between these funds and gold, on transferring his balance to currency account. Or he could force the gold by legal demand. On these points the Constitution forbids interference by the Legislature. But after all, they amount to no great sum in the aggregate. The settlement of the whole $25,000,000 at 4 per cent. premium on the gold demanded, would be only one million of dollars, or less than two per cent. on the Bank Capital, while the surplus or undivided profits on that capital sixty days ago, stood six or seven millions.

In this view of the case, timid or gold-grasping depositors may as well leave their money where it is, if the bank be deemed solvent. They would get the same premium for their balance in bank, after suspension, as on the same amount of gold, withdrawn and hoarded now to secure such premium. The premium itself would hardly pay the risk of hiding away the gold until the event takes place. But it is not lost by leaving the money where it is, to be turned into current funds after the account is transferred into current funds.

The City would not be deprived of Banks by general suspension. The number of solvent banks at the Clearing-House would remain the same, unless two or three gentlemen in Wall-street should become so disgusted as to wind up and quit. Even this is not apprehended. Something of this sort was threatened in 1847, but gracefully given over on sober, second thought.

Receivership may be threatened. But the Legislature will take care that this remedy is not abused. The individual creditor, on suspicion of insolvency, and on taking the oath and filing his security, may thus annoy the Banks. If they are insolvent, and can neither be made to pay, out of their assets, the principal, nor to allow the just premium on a debt due in gold, they ought to be wound up. The question, however, is different with the State. She can forbear proceedings as long as the public necessity and convenience demand, and would doubtless do so.

Foreign Recruiting for the British Army.

The reports which we see flitting through the European mails of the anxiety of the British to get foreign officers for service in India, are, we should hope, founded upon a misapprehension on the part of some one or other. French, Danish, and last of all, Austrian officers have been talked of as in great demand on the part of the English Government, and by the very last mail we are informed that two hundred Austrian officers have volunteered for the arduous task of quelling the Sepoy rebellion. We sincerely trust, for the sake of the English army, and the cause for which they are fighting, that this is not a correct statement. The experience of the last war in the matter of foreign legions, ought to have taught the English Government a lesson not easily forgotten. Their attempt to recruit in this country very nearly involved them in a war. On the Continent, and particularly in Germany, they were successful enough so far as numbers went, but as regarded quality, we are not far short of the truth when we assert that a greater pack of scoundrels than Her Majesty's German Legion has rarely been collected under the flag of any potentate under the sun, always excepting Her Majesty's bashi-bazouks in Turkey, and General WALKER's fillibusters in Nicaragua.

The men were, as a general rule, what an Irishman would call "rapins an' scrapins," or in other words, the tag end of the great German race, thriftless, shiftless, good-for-nothing knaves, whom all decent circles had cast off—too lazy to work, or even to beg, and ready for any service which gave them even a contingent remainder in a good dinner. The privates were bad enough in all conscience, but the officers out-did them. They got drunk, robbed the regimental chest, bilked their men of pay and rations, used their uniform for the purposes of swindling, and in fact left nothing undone to bring themselves and their corps into discredit and disgrace. The British nation had reason to thank Providence that the war came to an end before these worthies had a chance of becoming its protectors on the battle-field. But we as well as other countries have had ample reason to deplore their retirement into private life, as we have, of course, furnished the asylum to which a great number of them have come to repose on their laurels.

We do not mean to place the proposed supplies of Austrian or Danish officers in the same category with the Teutonic band of Invincibles who donned the red coat two years ago; but we should like to know in command of whom it is proposed to place them. Surely not of the English troops, because in the first instance, England swarms at this moment with good officers, on half-pay, who would be only too glad to get employment; and secondly, because no troops in Europe are less fitted to be commanded by foreigners than the British. The men who compose the rank and file of the British Army have even a larger share of John Bull prejudices than their betters. They share to a greater or less extent the contempt for foreigners for which the whole nation is more or less remarkable. One of the foibles of the English soldier is the desire to be commanded by what he considers a "gentleman," and gentleman-hood he associates inseparably with certain manners, and style of speaking and living, peculiar to Englishmen of the better classes. A foreign officer's demeanor towards soldiers, the distinction drawn in most continental armies between social and military rank, are things unknown in England. English troops would, in our opinion, work badly under either Austrian or French leadership, particularly the latter. They would maintain discipline amongst them, we dare say, but they would not make them fight well.

There are objections still more serious to placing them in command of native corps raised for the emergency. Native corps of all tribes are bad per se; in the hands of foreigners they would be still worse. It would be not at all unlikely that the officers would, long ere the close of this struggle, become something like political agents of their own Governments, fosterers of intrigues even more to be feared than a Sepoy mutiny. The English, as far as the final security of their Empire is concerned, have little to fear from any rising, however well-organized or formidable, amongst either Hindoos or Mussulmans; but whenever the day comes which shall see a native army of any size and pretensions marshaled against them under European officers, with the bloody traditions of 1857 still fresh in their memories, it will need a host of CLIVES and HAVELOCKS to avoid a catastrophe.

It is not for the want of good regimental officers that the British suffer. As far as the command of battalions goes, no army in the world is better provided. It is in the higher grades that the inefficiency is most apparent, and most felt; and in the earlier part of every war, the army fights its way through a slough of blunders, the rank and file atoning in blood for the stupidity of the generals and the staff. The regard for vested interests and the tenderness for private feelings are so great in England that, at the beginning of a struggle, all the old fogies who in peace have been living on the memory of past exploits, are placed in the van by prescriptive right. The first year is generally devoted to knocking them off; in the second the struggle begins in earnest, when younger arms come to the front. The army in India has been so far favored by a deadly climate that elderly gentlemen have been swept away at the outset, and the "rising young men" find themselves in possession of opportunities such as have not been seen since the days of CLIVE. There are enough of the latter in the English army for the work before them, and there are enough fighting men to be had in England to sweep India from the Indus to Travancore, but no foreign war will ever call an enthusiastic crowd of volunteers into the field, until there is promotion from the ranks on a large scale. A vast deal of the enthusiasm and military ardor of the country is now to be found in a class of modern growth, who will not enlist as privates, and cannot afford to get commissions. The lower grades of the middle classes furnish hundreds of thousands of young men each year to the shop and counting-house and the Colonies, who, under a better system, would, before many months, swarm under the walls of Delhi.

Our Police Force.

We are happy to be able to state that our Board of Police Commissioners has resumed active operations. Its members are all in town. The "obvious reasons" which have prevented two or three of its members from attending its meetings, have disappeared,—and on Friday last a session was held, of which the proceedings, including debates, filled a full column of the TIMES next day. We hail this as a symptom of returning life. The Board made a very good beginning on Friday, and we trust they will continue it at their adjourned meeting to-day.

Mayor WOOD offered a resolution to continue in office such of the old Police as were not legally dismissed. This was carried, Commissioner BOWEN voting in its favor,—and a Special Committee was appointed to determine what members of the old force could be admitted under it into the new. Mayor WOOD then proposed that any further vacancies that might exist should be filled by the appointment of "such members of the old force as had commended themselves especially by good conduct, and against whom no charges have been preferred." This proposition, we are sorry to see, was rejected,—Messrs. NYE, BOWEN and STRANAHAN voting against it,—upon what grounds, we are not informed. The public, we are confident, will be somewhat surprised at the defeat of a resolution so well calculated to secure efficiency and experience in the Police Department. The law creating this Board designed to retain in the service all the old police, except such as might be dismissed for cause. Mayor WOOD, it is true, immediately upon the decision of the Court sustaining the law, took the extraordinary step of disbanding the whole force, and some of its members, in their ignorance of the law, very probably obeyed these his illegal and absurd directions. But this certainly is scarcely a sufficient reason for dispensing with their services, when they are needed, especially as the Mayor himself seems at last to regard his proclamation in a proper light, and votes for the retention of the men whom he had ordered to disband. The public needs the services of precisely these men. They have had experience, and their good conduct hitherto affords the best accessible guarantee of good conduct in the future.

Mr. BOWEN subsequently proposed that some thirty or forty policemen, who have been doing duty hitherto as specials, should be added to the regular force. There seems to have been no valid reason why this should not have been assented to. Mayor WOOD, however, objected, upon the simple and explicit ground of the political complexion of the men,—and he carried with him votes enough to defeat it. The Mayor does not hesitate openly to declare, both in word and act, that he will not consent to give the City such a Police as he knows it needs, unless the "political complexion" of the men appointed suits his views. It may be that other members are equally governed by political considerations in their action at the Board,—but they at least have sufficient regard for public sentiment and public justice not to avow and glory in it.

Two propositions to fill up the Force have thus been defeated. But we trust the members of the Board will not be discouraged. We hope they will continue their efforts,—introduce one after another all the various methods they can devise for the accomplishment of this object, and then leave the public to pronounce judgment upon them, and upon the men by whom they may be defeated.

THE ERA OF SHINPLASTERS.—Ever since the repudiation of the old Continental currency the people of this country have had a very natural disgust for what is called shinplaster money, and the very mention of a suspension of specie payments by the Banks conjures up visions of the filthy little paper abominations which, in such times, are made to do duty for gold and silver. When the Banks suspended twenty years ago the whole country was flooded with these nuisances, of all sorts of values, from six and a quarter cents up to a dollar. Hundreds of small brokers issued their own notes, and a good many of the city governments put into circulation their promises to pay twelve and a half and twenty-five cents. People took them, knowing them to be worthless, because there was no other currency. At the West there were all sorts of bills put into circulation, and thousands got badly bitten by the infamous "red dog" currency which was peculiar, we believe, to the State of Michigan. There was then but very little of either gold or silver in the country, and people had to accommodate themselves to their circumstances. Even in the event of a general suspension of specie payments, by our banks, the inconveniences which were experienced at the last suspension, for the lack of a metallic currency could not be felt again, as there is an abundance of gold and silver afloat for all the purposes of commerce. But we do not anticipate a revival of the shinplaster era, just yet; the present week, however, will probably settle the question whether we are to return to a rag currency, or continue on the system under which the country has heretofore prospered.

BLOOD AND WHAT BECOMES OF IT.—Antitheses are not always favorable to truth, but Mr. (we beg his pardon) Lord MACAULAY's famous antithetical glorification of British society is an exception to the rule. It is indeed the strength of England that her "Aristocracy is the most Democratic, and her Democracy the most aristocratic," in Europe. In other words, the best of "blood" in Britain, as in this country, expends the man who indulges therein to talk a deal of sad bosh. For anybody is liable, at four removes in the past, to find himself the cousin of everybody. So that Duke of NORFOLK of the Regent's time, who did penance for his Protestantism by wearing a violet-colored coat, and was given to sleeping on other people's cellars, found to his cost when he undertook to feast "all the blood of all the Howards," that a quarter of [illegible]

LATEST INTELLIGENCE

Telegraph to the New-York Times.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Progress of Other Funds—United States Stocks—Financial Aspects—General American Matters—The Campaigners and Kindness Ballads, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Oct. 11.

It is understood here that Senator DOUGLAS has lost very heavily in the current speculation, having been engaged in extensive time-speculations in Western lands and lots.

Senator DOUGLAS, of Georgetown, who recently visited us, the president, here very honorably given up many more property to satisfy the claims of their creditors, even to their splendid private mansions on Georgetown Heights, which in these times must sell for a song. They have heretofore been reckoned among the wealthiest and most successful business men in the district.

It is now quite certain that the Administration will not recommend the proposed plan of giving the Government control of the District Water Works.

A large part of the work has been put out on contract, and many are now fear the contractors will not be able to fulfil their agreements, but that they to thus forfeit their contracts, a great deal of present chaos unfortunate their succession. Rather, that this fact not yet been perfected to all the hands required for the purposes of the work.

The Treasury Department yesterday redeemed public stocks to the amount of $146,000—the sum disbursed on the account, with interest and premium, being $161,000.

There is great making to induce the Government to notice Iturbide, the Minister of Guatemala, as the representative also of the Provisional Government of Nicaragua. Nothing has yet been said in the premises, nor are there any reliable indications as to the probable result.

Mr. James L. Wilson, of your City, and formerly of the Accessory Transit Company, is now here, as the representative of a company of capitalists who have lately secured from the Provisional Government of Nicaragua a clear right to reopen the Transit, on recognition of Mr. INGRAHAM is urged, with the negotiation of a treaty with the United States for protection of the rights of this new Company. It is at least doubtful whether Mr. BUCHANAN will consent to be a party to the arrangement, unless it can be shown that there is some Government, or other in Nicaragua, exercising, be it seen as it may, the single and sole sovereignty of the country. At present the Government is nothing but a Junta of Doctors.

Advices received here confirm the statements in relation to Sir-Minister CRAMPTON's rude treatment of Mr. BUCHANAN, United States Minister at London. It appears that Mr. CRAMPTON repeatedly, and in the most public and marked manner, has avoided Mr. BUCHANAN, frustrating the best efforts of the latter to induce the kindest and most cordial feeling on his part. Some instances occurred recently, while Mr. BUCHANAN was visiting the street in company with a British nobleman, Mr. CRAMPTON was observed approaching from the opposite direction, but upon seeing our Minister he suddenly pulled up an alley-way and again avoided him. Conduct like this, frequently repeated, has attracted attention, and elicited a good deal of severe remark against Mr. C., who would seem to have no reason for it, except his general hatred to Americans since his forced retirement from the Embassy here. Speculation in the News Market—Financial Prospects—The New Tennessee Senator—The Tax of Engineer Martin, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Oct. 10, 1857.

The time is longer in coming than I anticipated for resuming the duties of a Washington correspondent at this point, for the reason that financial embarrassment is absorbing everything else here at present, and effect a complete stagnation in the news market. And so it will probably remain until the meeting of Congress. I will endeavor, however, to keep the readers of the TIMES posted, henceforth, in whatever of interest may transpire at the Federal Capital.

The fact that so large a proportion of the people of this City depend upon the Treasury for their support, doubtless lessens the money pressure here. Government disburses about half a million of dollars in specie every month, which at once goes into circulation within the District, and nobody, of course, has the least fear that the Treasury will suspend. Nevertheless, the general suspension of the District Banks has seriously, though not irremediably, embarrassed business men, and those who were carrying on large building or speculative enterprises. Their employes suffer in turn, because of the consequent necessity of suspending works, in many cases, which have afforded profitable employment to laboring men.

Public sentiment is arraying itself against the Distrct Banks, apparently with a great deal of force, for there does not seem to have been any necessity for their unexpected prostration of public confidence, nor any good reason for closing their doors so suddenly and entirely. The probable result will be the destruction of these institutions altogether, by legislation of Congress next Winter, if indeed their immediate winding up is not already provided for by existing law. It is held by eminent jurists that not a single Bank in the District has legal existence to-day—at least not as a Bank of circulation. In August, 1841, Congress, after having repeatedly refused to renew their charters, authorized them until 1846, for the express purpose of enabling them to wind up their affairs. It would seem quite clear that this extension gave them no right whatever to issue new paper, or do anything else but wind up their business; nevertheless they have gone on until now, transacting every branch of banking business as freely as though Congress had granted them perpetual charters. Indeed one of them has put forth a new issue of bank notes within a few days past, in direct defiance of the act of Congress referred to, provided that if the Banks, at any time, shall suspend specie payments for ten days their charters shall be absolutely forfeited. Therefore, in any event, settles the question, such steps are likely to be taken by the proper authorities to enforce sundry penalties against the defunct corporations, also provided by the law under which they claim existence. As the Trustees of these institutions are men of wealth, and individually responsible for their liabilities, it is not probable that holders of District bank notes will eventually lose a dollar.

The Administration has evinced a most creditable disposition to do everything in its power to relieve the distress consequent upon the monetary revulsion. Measures have already paid just and fitting tribute to its wisdom and liberality with which Secretary CONRAD approaches the operations of the Treasury Department in this and, so far as possible, in consistence with the law. It shall ultimately be determined, as I have stated, to pass the construction of the District Water Works, on the extra line, at once, profitable employment will be afforded to all the brick-layers and laborers now here for the greater part of the winter. A million of dollars stands appropriated for this work, and it is proposed to expend the whole of it within the next five months, if necessary, in order to afford temporary aid to all good workmen who need it. The plan will be adopted, unless, on further consideration, it shall seem inconsistent with the public interest. In any event, the President and his cabinet advisers deserve credit for the disposition to relieve the threatened suffering in thousands of poor families. Let me caution men, however, against crowding hither, in consequence of this paragraph, in hope of finding employment—for it is not probable that the proposed relief can be extended beyond persons already here.

A gentleman called upon Mr. BUCHANAN yesterday to submit his estimation to some benevolent enterprise, which did not seem to him to have paramount claims in these times of general distress—so he merely mentioned. The gentleman was unwilling to accept a subscription, and persisted in urging his enterprise. Mr. BUCHANAN said to him with significant emphasis, "I have about——[illegible] per year to devote to charitable purposes, but I must be the sole judge as to where it is my duty to bestow it, and in this time of general distress, when there is so much of individual suffering all around us demanding immediate relief, I do not think that the benevolent enterprise which you present has any claim upon my purse." His visitor saw that the President was in earnest and retired forthwith.

Hon. ANDREW JOHNSON, who has just been elected to the U. S. Senate from Tennessee, to succeed Hon. JAMES C. JONES, presents in his own person one of the most remarkable examples of what proper ambition may attain under Republican institutions. His origin was very obscure, and of educational advantages in early life he had none. After he married, his wife taught him his letters, and while he prosecuted his calling as a journeyman tailor, to support his family, he acquired the simplest rudiments of education. But advancing step by step, reading with avidity, studying closely, and striving constantly to improve his condition, he has at last attained one of the most eminent positions in the gift of his countrymen. It will be remembered he served in the U. S. House of Representatives several years ago. As a Legislator he was industrious and practical, rather than brilliant; but wielded a powerful influence in the deliberations of the body. His faults probably, consist in excessive partizanship, and that tendency to illiberality in the public expenditures, which oftentimes, under the name of "economy," is disastrous to the interests of the country. In the higher and broader sphere to which he is now elevated, these faults may be modified and softened; but in any event, Mr. JOHNSON can hardly fail to be a most useful and laborious public servant.

Engineer-in-chief MARTIN still maintains his position in the Navy Department, but there is reason to fear that the speculating interests which are at work to secure his removal will eventually accomplish their purpose. The pressure upon the Secretary of the Navy in this case is undoubtedly very great; but he certainly should bear in mind that the pressure of the public interests is far greater, though possibly not so active. If there are any charges of inefficiency or unfaithfulness against Mr. MARTIN no one has dared to breathe them publicly. If such charges can be substantiated, of course they will justify his removal. But it is notorious that those who seek this result have sworn vengeance against the Engineer-in-chief, because, in the honest exercise of his duty, he has boldly resisted their efforts to get at the public treasury through him, instead of consenting to share with them the rich spoil which might be secured with his aid. It would seem that the simple question presented here is whether honesty is deemed by the Executive to be good policy. To an Engineer of Mr. MARTIN's capabilities, the position he holds can be of but little personal consequence; but to the country the question involved in his case is one of vast importance. If a competent man can only maintain a responsible position in the public service, by yielding his convictions of duty to the Government, at the demand of every speculator who controls a partizan Press or has strong personal political relations to the Executive, the Executive Department must soon become little else than seductive avenues to the penitentiary. The Kansas Election.

ST. LOUIS, Saturday, Oct. 10.

From a gentleman just arrived from Kansas, it has been learned that Jefferson County is largely Republican, and Calhoun County doubtful. The following precincts of Leavenworth County give Republican majorities: Easton, 46; Wyandotte, 50; and Leavenworth 200. Delaware and Kickapoo give Democratic majorities of 50 and 450. In the latter precinct the troops voted at the instance of Gov. WALKER. Johnson County is conceded to the Democrats, but it is thought that Douglas County will give a sufficiently large Republican majority to carry the district.

ST. LOUIS, Saturday, Oct. 10.

Advices from Leavenworth to the 8th instant state, that Leavenworth County is the only one thus far heard from, giving a Democratic majority. Donihan County gives a Republican majority of 23; Atchison a Republican majority of 44; and Douglas a Republican majority of 1,600. These returns are looked upon as authentic. Tecumseh township gives 100 Republican majority; Topeka 100, and Calhoun 150.

ST. LOUIS, Saturday Oct. 10—P. M.

Later advices state that the majority for Parrott, the Republican candidate for Congress, over Ransom, the Democratic candidate, is from five to eight thousand.

According to the estimate of free State men, the Council will stand—9 Republicans to 4 Democrats, and the House 24 Republicans to 15 Democrats.

Johnson county gives a Democratic majority of 250.

Police Intelligence.

AN EDITOR CHARGED WITH ENCOURAGING GAMBLING.—Mr. Nathaniel R. Stimson, Editor of the New-York Day Book, was arrested on Saturday morning, charged with encouraging gambling in his paper. Mr. A. Oakey Hall, District-Attorney, made the affidavit upon which the warrant of arrest was issued. The affidavit charges that on the 1st of October an advertisement appeared in the Day Book of an alleged illegal lottery in the State of Georgia, and that there was a favorable notice of the same in the editorial columns. It is further stated that in the same issue there was an editorial calling upon the District-Attorney to use every means in his power for the suppression of gambling. The District-Attorney hints that he cannot do better than follow the editor's advice, and thinks it advisable to communicate with Mr. Stimson himself. The examination in the case was to have taken place, Saturday afternoon, at the Essex Market Police Court, but the prisoner did not appear till after the closing of the Court, and the hearing had to be postponed. It is probable the case will come up to-day.

BOLD STREET ROBBERY.—Late Saturday evening Mr. Daniel Ostrander, residing at No. 401 Canal street, was going up Broadway, near Leonard-street, somewhat the worse for liquor, William Brown, a noted thief, seeing Mr. O.'s condition, jostled along side of him and, by a dexterous professional manœuvre, speedily picked his pocket of his gold watch, with the gold chain and key appendage and a dirk-knife, worth altogether $160. Mr. O. became quickly conscious of the operation which victimized him, and vigorously cried out "stop thief." Officer Stillwell, of the Fifth Ward, saw the thief running, and starting in pursuit, captured him at the corner of Leonard and Church-streets. The thief let drop the watch in the chase, but it was afterwards, together with the other stolen articles, recovered. Justice OGDEN yesterday locked up the culprit for trial.

TWO THIEVES NABBED AND ESCAPED.—As Officer Forshay, of Third Ward, was patroling his beat about 3 o'clock Saturday morning, he encountered a couple of suspicious fellows with some boxes in their possession. He immediately nabbed them and took them around to the Station-house. They evidently did not like the looks of the Station-house, for as the officer was on the point of taking them inside, they dropped their booty and ran off and escaped, one of them, however, leaving a portion of the tail of his coat in the officer's hand. The booty left behind comprised two boxes of chewing tobacco and a number of pieces of dry goods.

BEATEN IN THE STREET.—WM. WOOD, residing at No. 24 Vandewater-street, was found Friday evening insensible on the pavement, corner of Gold and Spruce streets. He revived sufficiently to tell his name and residence, and relate the fact that he had been attacked by some rowdies and beaten. Officers FAY and BLACK of the Second Ward took him to his residence, and it is thought he will not survive his injuries. The Coroner has been notified to hold an post mortem examination. He charges two men, named GALLAGHER and QUINN, with having beaten him.

RUN OVER BY THE CARS.—At 7½ o'clock on Friday morning JAMES KELLY, a boy 16 years of age, residing at No. 253 East Nineteenth-street, accidentally fell in front of one of the Harlem Railroad passenger cars just as a train was on the point of starting from Thirtieth-street. His right leg was nearly cut off, and he was otherwise badly injured. He was taken to the Bellevue Hospital, and died a few hours afterwards. An inquest was held yesterday on the body, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts stated.

SUDDEN DEATH.—At 9½ o'clock Friday evening, as JAMES CALLIGAN, residing at No. 6 Fletcher-street, was talking to a friend, he suddenly fell dead to the floor. Death is supposed to have been caused by an apoplectic fit. He leaves a wife and child. Deceased was formerly a waiter in the eating-house of Clark & Brown, Maiden-lane.

RUN OVER BY A CITY CAR.—Michael Givins, a boy two and a half years old, was run over on Saturday by a Fourth-avenue car, at the corner of Centre and Worth streets. The child's leg was frightfully crushed, and his life is despaired of. He was taken to the City Hospital.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.—Yesterday afternoon Sergeant Smith and Officer Davis discovered that a negro had sold a new set of harness for $2 50 to Barney Fleming, a junk-shop keeper in Baxter-street. Having no doubt that the harness had been stolen, they arrested Fleming on a charge of receiving stolen goods. The accused was locked up in the Tombs for examination.

EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.—John Sumner, who for a number of years has been known in the Ninth Ward as a vagrant having no visible means of support, was found yesterday morning in the rear yard of No. 649 Washington-street, suffering from injuries which he had received from a fall while intoxicated. He was taken to the Station-house and a physician called, but he died within a few hours. The Coroner has been notified.

THE RECENT SUICIDE IN WASHINGTON-STREET.—An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner Gamble, at No. 158 Washington-street, upon the body of James Gaynor, who hung himself on Friday last to a bedpost of his bed. The evidence showed that the deceased had lost an eye, which affected his spirits, and that he was an intemperate man. Deceased was an Irishman, 40 years of age, and leaves a wife and family.

DEATH FROM FALLING DOWN STAIRS.—A Spaniard named Marino Cavarino, residing at No. 69 Green street, and employed as an interpreter at the St. Nicholaist Hotel, on Saturday morning fell down a flight of stairs at his residence and fractured his skull. He lived but a short time after the fall. Coroner Gamble held an inquest upon the body yesterday, and it was shown that the deceased was subject to occasional fits, and there was no doubt but that he fell while in a fit. A verdict was given accordingly.

PARK CRUISERS ARRESTED.—A large lot of Park cruisers were arrested on Friday night by officer Birney of the 2d Ward. While conveying them to the Tombs yesterday three escaped. They gave their names as Lavina Kelly, Margaret Robinson, Jane Wilson, Mary Anne Shepard, Mary Miller, Kate Murphy, Mary Connolly, Mary Jane Williams, Mary Sullivan, Caroline Griffin, Anne Williams, Kate Kennedy, Anne O'Brien, Ellen Corley, Catherine Dunn, Margaret Thompson, Mary Smith, and Mary Langan. Justice Osborn sent them to the Work-house for six months each.

YOUNG VEAL.—On Saturday morning, the Health Wardens of the Third Ward, attached to the City Inspector's Office, discovered, in the vicinity of Washington Market, the carcases of several calves which had been prematurely brought from New-Jersey and offered for sale. They were at once seized and dispatched on their way to Barren Island, the depot for corrupted animal matter found within the City limits.

GARBAGE ORDINANCE.—Over sixty complaints were handed on Saturday to the Corporation Attorney, in relation to violations of the ordinance relating to removing garbage, night-soil and other noxious matter from the streets, the penalty attached to the violation of it being a fine from $1 to $50 according to the aggravation of the offence.

THE SUNDAY LIQUOR LAW.—Thirty-four liquor dealers have been arrested during the past week, charged with violating the Sunday Liquor Law. Justice Rankins held them to bail in $100 each.

DRUNKEN ASSAULT.—At 11 o'clock on Sunday morning, James Downey was passing down Beekman-street, when he was assaulted by Patrick Anderson and Charles Moore, without the slightest provocation. They jumped on him and nearly killed him. Officers Carrington and Curtis came to his rescue and nabbed the fellows, who were held to bail by Judge Osborn in $800.

MORE STREET WALKERS.—On Saturday and Sunday night, the officers of the second Precinct arrested round the Park about fourteen prostitutes and locked them up. Most of them will be sent up.—Eighteen of these abandoned females who belong to the "chain gang" of thieves, were sent up for six months by Judge Osborn. The Park never was in better condition than now as to this nuisance.

The Kansas Election—Letter from Governor Walker.

From the Doughton Constitutionalist.

The Black Republican speakers and papers were declaring that Governor WALKER had said they might vote under the Organic Act in the October election, regardless of the Territorial Legislature. Several gentlemen, of this place, interrogated Gov. WALKER on this point, and he says he has been misrepresented, and makes the subjoined reply:

LECOMPTON, K. T., Wednesday, Sept. 2, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: On my return from Camp Cooke last night, to Lecompton, I received your communication dated in August last, in which you say: "Has your Excellency prompted to disregard the Territorial laws and afford your protection to all resident citizens of Kansas in casting their votes for a delegate to Congress and members of the Territorial Legislature in October, under the provisions of the Organic Act?"

I conclude, gentlemen, as well from the letter subscribed to this communication, as from its whole tenor, that none of you have ever believed a statement so absurd and preposterous. In my inaugural address, as upon all other occasions, I have uniformly declared that the Territorial laws were recognized by the Congress of the United States, and by the President of the United States, as well as by myself, and that they must and would be fully executed by me to the utmost extent of my power. I have also uniformly declared, that if these laws were resisted by force, I would, upon evidence of the fact, cause them to be carried into effect, even should it be necessary to avail myself of the aid of the regular troops of the United States, which might be at my disposal for such a purpose; and I have always acted upon that principle.

These facts are well known to the whole people of Kansas, and, therefore, upon this subject there could have been no misapprehension.

Referring to the election in October next, I have said that, at that date, the people of Kansas were authorized to vote, not only under the Territorial law, but under the Organic Act of Congress. This statement was misprinted and misquoted by omitting the important word "only," which error (not of mine) has long since been corrected. No one, however, could have misunderstood this statement, for in the same address, as on all other occasions, I distinctly declared that the Territorial laws were valid and must be obeyed. What I intended to say on that, as well as on all other occasions, and what, in fact, I did say, as contradistinguishing the election in October from the revolutionary proceedings under the so-called Topeka Constitution, was this: that the election in October was based, not only upon the authority of the Territorial Legislature, but upon that of Congress also. And this is a true statement both of the fact and the law.

The organic act of Congress authorizes the Territorial Legislature, in express terms, to prescribe the qualifications of voters at all elections in Kansas, except the first, which has long since passed. And by virtue of that authority, the Territorial Legislature, on the 20th of February last, did prescribe these qualifications in the 5th section of their act of that date. To that act, then, we must look for the qualifications of voters. Among other requisite it prescribes a six months' residence preceding the election. No one, then, can vote at the October election without such residence, and the authority on which this qualification rests, has, in the manner I have stated, the joint sanction of the Territorial Legislature and of the United States. I have never said or supposed that any one could vote at the election, without possessing the qualifications prescribed by that act of the 20th of February, 1857, but I have said that the right of voting in October was not confined to those who were registered under the Territorial Convention law of the 19th of February, 1857.

In your communication you further say: "We also remind you of the insecurities of the judges of the elections, and the inability to secure a fair and honest expression from the legal voters, should the polls be taken, (as has been threatened,) by armed men for the purpose above-mentioned."

While, I am most anxious "to secure a fair and honest expression from the legal voters," it is also my sincere desire to avoid the display of a military force at the polls, unless the danger is imminent, and the use of such force necessary. In all such occasions I must judge of the facts when they are presented to me, and especially the statements of the proper authorities of your county, including the Sheriff and judges of election, whom it is my anxious desire to aid and protect in the discharge of their duties.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. J. WALKER.

To Messrs. J. W. DAVIS, THOS. J. KEY, B. C. DRISCOLL and others.

DOUGHTON CITY, K. T.

The Earthquake at St. Louis.

From the Democrat, Oct. 9.

On the morning of yesterday, at twenty minutes past 4 o'clock, nearly the whole population of this city and region were startled from repose by the roar and commotion of a violent earthquake. The first premonition is said to have been given by a slight concussion about midnight. But at the time stated, those who were awake, heard a low and distant rumbling, which failed to arouse attention till it rapidly increased to the volume of the sound of heavy trains of cars thundering through every street of the city. Some liken the noise to a protracted reverberating explosion, others to the roar of a whirlwind, others to the mere passing of market wagons—but all agree that it was tremendous. When at its height the buildings began to rock appallingly. Thousands sprang from their beds in alarm, and rushed into the streets. The northern sky was clear, but from the southward a heavy mist was swiftly advancing, and in a moment nearly obscured the street lamps. In many instances the lamps were in an instant unaccountably extinguished. The violent shock lasted full three-fourths of a minute, and was instantly succeeded by a second roar and attendant shock of less severity. Many describe both as one, and aver that the heavy shock lasted full three minutes. In about five minutes afterward the noise and concussion were repeated with comparative mildness, but very perceptibly.

We conversed with many on the occurrence, and their statements, of course various, attest and corroborate the above. A citizen living on Gratiot and Fourth streets, in a heavily-built house, whose walls are of eighteen inches thickness, and who was sleeping on the first floor, describes the shock as exceedingly violent, and the motion as a horizontal vibration from east to west. A mirror hanging on a north and south wall swayed from and towards the wall, through an arc of several inches. He ran into the street, expecting the fall, if not of his own house, of a frailer one near, and found a dense fog rolling from the southward, and shortly enveloping everything.

An intelligent gentleman, living on Centre, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, states that the heavy rumbling, as if by a host of coal wagons, proceeded from the southward, that things shook from north to south, and with an appalling violence, that then a dense mist appeared, and in ten minutes occurred another shock, the accompanying noise bearing more from the westward. A well-known physician in his vicinity, was affrighted at hearing the brick walls of his residence positively cracking and snapping around him.

We are apprised that a slight shock was felt on Monday, the court house being perceptibly jarred.

From the Leader.

Two shocks of an earthquake were felt yesterday morning in this city and vicinity of more violence than are usual in this latitude. The first shock occurred about five minutes past 4 o'clock, and was preceded by a loud, continuous noise, like thunder or the roar of artillery. The earth then commenced shaking, and the houses seemed to rock from East to West. After a pause of eight or ten minutes the second shock came on, but was much less violent than the first. Deeming the house we were in—a tall, narrow five-story building, and we in the fifth—unsafe, we soon found our way to the ground, in Georgia costume, when we observed that the sky presented a singular appearance; an unusual ring was around the moon, and a peculiar fog hung close to the earth. A gentleman informed us that he saw a very brilliant meteor about the time of the first shock. Whether these signs had anything to do with the earthquake we leave others to determine.

Earthquakes, if we may believe the history of the rocks, have been no unusual things in this vicinity in ages past. And, not to go back to antiquity, many of our oldest citizens well remember the terrible earthquake that occurred at New-Madrid in 1811, when that village was partially destroyed, and a large section of that part of the State sunk and submerged, rendering an act of Congress necessary to grant other lands to the settlers in place of those that were destroyed. For many years after the occurrence the inhabitants experienced violent shocks periodically, and emigrants were afraid to settle in that quarter. After a while, however, they became used to them, and whenever one happened they would remark, "It is only an earthquake," and go about their business.

We find the following recorded in the Ithaca Journal of the 7th instant: A boy whose father, Joe NEWBERRY, and his mother died some years since, has been sick for six or seven months. He lies perfectly helpless, and his case altogether is a remarkable one. His limbs are swollen to a remarkable size, and on his legs are several sores. From one of them, on Sunday last, a stem like to that of a toad stool, and about the size of a small pipe stem, sprung up in length about six inches, and upon the top of this stem a formation took place, near the size of a four shilling piece. The edges of the formation were slightly bent over, and the face of it, when examined by a microscope, presented the appearance of a regular pasteboard flower. The flower faded yesterday throughout the day, but disappeared the evening after.

Ellen M. Noonan, a young woman in Boston, who had been arrested, committed suicide on Tuesday by taking laudanum.

LONG ISLAND.

POLITICAL MATTERS IN KINGS COUNTY.—The different Assembly Conventions of the American and Republican parties were held on Saturday evening last. The Conventions adjourned without making any nominations, not being able to agree upon the candidates. Arrangements will be made during the present week so that both parties will unite on Assemblymen.

The Democratic Convention in the Third Assembly District, held a meeting for the 8th time, on Friday night, and adjourned without agreeing upon a candidate.

BURGLARIES.—No. 150 Willow-street, Brooklyn, was robbed on Friday night, of property valued at $250.

A thief giving his name as SAMUEL R. WHEELOW, of No. 20 Jordan-street, on Saturday and during the evening departed, taking with him several articles of wearing apparel belonging to his fellow-boarders.

Breaking Sewer in Gold-Street at Brooklyn.

BROOKLYN CITY COURT.—SATURDAY, 10th.

Before Hon. E. D. Culver, Judge.

McFarland vs. The City of Brooklyn.—The movable property in the City Hall has twice been offered for sale to satisfy a judgment obtained by plaintiff, McFarland, for work done in extending Bond-street sewer to abate a nuisance. Owing to some irregularity, the financial officer had no authority to pay the claim, and on the last occasion, when the property was offered for sale, the Comptroller obtained an injunction. Argument was heard, and the following is the decision of the Court:

From the affidavits, the pleadings, and report of the Referee in this case, I have arrived at the following conclusions:

1. It was competent for the Board of Health to have directed the construction of the Bond-street sewer at the expense of the city, and to have levied a tax or brought taxation by which to have reimbursed the city. (Title 9, section 2, of the charter of 1853. 1 Revised Statutes, 4th edition, 616 to 625.) But the complaint does not allege that it did either.

2. The Common Council had authority to cause the work to be done at the expense of the city, either with or without any prior assessment to indemnify the city. (4 Selden 126, 2 Sandford 341. 2 Denio 279.) And as between the city and the contractor doing the work, the city is liable whether any assessment has been made or not. The Common Council has power to make the assessment after the work has been done, and after the contractor has been paid. (2 Sandford 341, and cases.)

3. If, however, the contractor had agreed to wait for his pay until the money should be collected on the assessment, he would be bound by such agreement, or at least to give the city a reasonable time to collect it. If such an agreement was made in this case, it would seem that a reasonable time was not given; for between the 15th June and the 29th July, one month and 15 days, the contract was made, the work all done, the suit brought, cause tried, and judgment entered.

4. From the facts disclosed in the Mayor's and Comptroller's affidavits, there is, to say the least, some grounds for believing the interests of the city were not very carefully guarded in conducting the suit.

5. The complaint and the answer are both defective; the former in not setting out what the resolution of the Board of Health was, and the time of payment fixed in the contract—the latter in not raising the proper issue as to the authority of the Common Council.

6. The report of the Referee is incurably defective, in not stating the facts found, and the conclusions of law. It simply states one conclusion of law, but finds no fact on which to base that conclusion. This is an irregularity not tolerated by the Code, and which this Court, and not the appellate tribunal, must correct. (§ 272 Code; 7 Pr. Rep. 281; 3 Code Rep. 142.)

7. Judgment having been entered upon such a report, could not, if for no other reason, be sustained.

The report of the Referee, the judgment, and the execution, must be set aside; a new trial granted, with leave to either party to amend his pleading as he may be advised. All further proceedings on the execution must be stayed, and the property levied on be released, $10 costs of this motion to abide the event of the action.

All without prejudice to any taxpayer of the corporation to apply for a mandamus to compel the Common Council to cause an assessment to be made and collected by which to indemnify the city for the expense of extending the sewer.

Jack Cade in Court.

From the Philadelphia Sunday Mercury.

EDWIN FORREST VS. WHEATLEY AND FREDERICKS.—INJUNCTION APPLIED FOR.—In the United States Circuit Court, yesterday afternoon, before an application was made by D. DOUGHERTY, Esq., on behalf of EDWIN FORREST, for an injunction to restrain Messrs. WHEATLEY and FREDERICKS from performing the play of "Jack Cade," last night, at the Arch Street Theatre. The following is a copy of the bill submitted by Mr. DOUGHERTY:

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania:

Edwin Forrest, of the City of Philadelphia, and a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, brings this his bill, against Wm. Wheatley and W. S. Fredericks, both of the City of Philadelphia, and citizens of the State of Pennsylvania.

And thereupon your orator complains and says that your orator, the said Edwin Forrest, is by profession an actor and performer of dramatic and other compositions, and from time to time engaged in the public performance and representation of such dramatic compositions commonly called plays.

That some time in the year 18—, one Robert T. Conrad, of the City of Philadelphia, wrote a certain play or dramatic composition, entitled Jack Cade, or the Kentish Rebellion.

And your orator further shows unto your honors, that the said Robert T. Conrad being the author and composer of the said play, was and became entitled to him and his assigns to all the privileges arising from a copyright of the same, and being entitled, he, the said Robert T. Conrad, sold and assigned to your orator for a full and valuable consideration, which your orator duly paid him, the said play or dramatic composition and all his, the said Conrad's right, title, and interest in the same.

And your orator further shows unto your Honor, that on the 16th day of August, 1856, an act of Congress was passed, entitled an act to amend the several acts respecting copyrights.

That under the provisions of the said act of the 16th August, 1856, your orator being the sole owner and proprietor of the said play, on the 8th November, 1856, filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, a copyright of said play, the record of such filing being given in the words of the same.

Attached to the bill was the affidavit of Mr. Forrest, which set forth that he had purchased the play of "Jack Cade" from Judge Conrad, for which he had paid $1,000, and that he had copyrighted it in accordance with law. The affidavit of William H. Maurice was also attached, in which he said that he had passed the Arch-street Theatre on the morning of that day, (Saturday,) and had seen on the placard the play of "Jack Cade" announced

MONDAY, Oct. 12—A. M.

The supply of Gold to the City for banking [illegible] in the course of the past week, amounted to [illegible], as follows:

[illegible] disbursement of Sub-Treasury	1,037,300
By California packet of Sept. 5	$1,208,734
	$3,246,033

The present difference in the Sub-Treasury balance of Saturday and Oct. 10 is only $1,037,500. But [illegible] was received by express from the Boston and Philadelphia offices, the net disbursements over the ordinary receipts are practically as above stated. $1,037,500. Some few parcels of Gold are known to have come from neighboring points to the City Banks, though these count but little against the main current which has been flowing to the City, and to note-holders and small depositors over the bank counter. This drain during the past week counterbalanced, and may have absorbed a few days more than the California receipts, as above stated. But taking off on to-day's average need be [illegible] The very state of the case will be [illegible] to a few hours. Whether the reserve [illegible], as last week, $10,000,000 or $10,[illegible], will not add to the present uneasiness. Where shortages then even ten millions have be[illegible] through a continuous heavy drain to Europe for several weeks in succession, with no prospect, as in this case, of the same gold [illegible] to Banks during the new week, [illegible] the Banks will have no difficulty [illegible] their integrity through the trial of the next few days, severe as it may be. The drain to the country is falling off. What which is left behind the bank counter increased somewhat on Saturday, because of the natural concern among small depositors created by the breaking down of the Bowery Bank. But placing the whole for the next six days at the outside or extreme calculation of $[illegible] per day, the danger ahead is not imminent, and with courage and prompt action in every case of weakness or sudden emergency in the Clearing House, it will be passed safely. Next Saturday night, is it asked where the [illegible] would leave the Banks on the corresponding average? The answer is practically unimportant as between seven or nine millions, if the good work of satisfying the public that the specie basis is to be maintained, if it costs next to the last million, be accomplished. With the arrival of the California packet of the 20th September, say with $1,250,000, and $1,750,000 more from the Sub-Treasury, (we have reason to believe it will be as much,) the average of this day week will not be less than $8,000,000. And, then, if not before, will set in the return tide. The twelve millions or more drained in three weeks will not have left the country; probably not one third of it will have left the City or its vicinity, and the cape of danger once doubled by the Banks—the specie basis fully assured—and gold will flow into their vaults from every imaginable quarter, Europe included.

The point of real concern is not from the popular drain, but in the Clearing-House, and this, as we respectfully suggested on Saturday, is not imminent, though it must be guarded against, or the whole fabric will totter before the week is half through. Every solvent Bank, in case of need, will have to be supported. The ten millions of Gold in the common exchequer, however divided in ownership to-day, is, at present, fit for nothing else. It is wanted for nothing else. It could be of no other future use, if withheld in this common emergency, for the stoppage of payment must be either general or not at all, so far as the received standard of business is concerned.

It is intimated that the point of danger is in divided counsels in the Clearing-House. This cannot be imminent, we hope. The few have no real control over the many. They need not attempt to employ the terrors of the Constitution to avert the last alternative. As sure as the majority of the Banks find that suspension must come, that instant the specie standard is at an end. One or two of the Banks may hoard specie enough to pay all their deposits; but after paying, they, and not the other Banks, will have to wind up for want of business. The proclamation of Governor KING will follow, next the convention of the Legislature, then the act of six or twelve months' forbearance. The whole remedy is well understood by the heads of all political parties. The Banks here are not ignorant of it, since the conference of Thursday with the Albany and Troy gentlemen. There will be no infringement of the constitutional rights of the Bank creditor; no legalization of suspension. The State, in her sovereign forbearance, however, can and will, if need be, stay the penalties of the act, as a public necessity. The alternative ought not to be availed of; need not be, with concert and mutual aid; to insure which, against the domineering spirit and disposition to hoard, of a small minority, it must be calmly looked to. The majority have only to do their whole duty—pay to the last dollar, and failing with this, they can rely upon the Legislature of the State of New-York for immediate relief.

The seventh week of the pressure closed on Saturday under a deeper financial gloom than any of its predecessors. But this was owing more to the heavy or prominent character of the failures of the day, than to any additional difficulties in the market for money or exchange, or the tone of the market for dividend paying stocks and bonds. The East River Bank failed at the close of the day. The Illinois Central announced an assignment in the forenoon. The New-York and Erie announced that their paper had gone to protest. The old and widely known private banking house of CORNING & Co. suspended payment, having been brought to this alternative by large advances on the Brooklyn City Water Loan, in anticipation of its negotiation. Mr. HENRY A. COTT also, an old and esteemed house, in the West India trade, the agent of the well known Havana firm of DRAKE & Co., stopped on Friday. The fact was alluded to in our last report, but the name withheld in the hope that the embarrassment might be accommodated. It was found impossible, however, and a large sum of his maturing acceptances and endorsements will be laid over this week. Another name in the Paper Commission line, SEYMOUR & Co. went to protest, one of the oldest houses in the trade. It was also announced that BOWERS & BEEKMAN and JOSEPH W. CORLIES & Co., in the Domestic Commission; WARD & GRANT, in the Grocery line, and several firms in the Tobacco Commission line had suspended. Our report on Saturday of W. H. CARY & Co. was a mistake. There is no such house here, and no similar name or firm among the suspensions. The telegraph announced to parties in the Street that the Michigan Central was protested in Boston, and that ROBERT EWING, CALDWELL & ENGLISH, and the Crane Iron Company had stopped in Philadelphia. The day's disasters were well calculated to dispirit the stoutest merchant, and to move the sympathies of all parties. Mr. CORT is one of our most public-spirited men, ready for every good work for public improvement, for private charity, and social and refined enjoyment. Mr. JASPER CORNING has been equally useful in advancing the Christian charities. They were better known on the Street than the other names announced, though not more respected than Mr. SEYMOUR and others are in the circle of their friends. It is the embarrassment of such men as these and the HARPERS that adds to the gloom of the pressure, more even than the sense of fear of what may yet grow out of it.

The official card of the Illinois Central, and of the New-York and Erie are copied in another place. The former Company holding their charter from another State were liable here to attachments as a foreign corporation. A general assignment, therefore, became a necessity when it was found that default must occur, in the absence of relief to the money or exchange market. It does not necessarily make the case worse for the future of the enterprise. The assignees are Messrs. ALCOP, PERKINS, SCHUCHARDT, L. L. STURGES and COOPER. The terms we understand to be such as to insure the fair and equitable treatment of all obligations. The stoppage of the Erie Company was not unexpected. It is a local corporation, and no interruption to the business of the road will be permitted to occur. It is not improbable the stock and unsecured bondholders will immediately relieve the embarrassment. The Michigan Central branch office here is not yet apprised of the nature of the difficulty at Boston.

The East River Bank failure will not produce any public mischief. The circulation was $91,522 on the last weekly report. They are fully secured at Albany. The deposits we understand to be reduced to $190,000, against a discount line of about $850,000. This Bank and the Bowery will probably call to report on the weekly average to-day. If so, there should be allowed from the total discount line, in contrasting it with last week, for the

Bowery Bank	$832,641
East River Bank	$91,522
Together	$1,241,759

The circulation of the East River Bank will continue to be received by the other banks in the course of business. This announcement is the same as the one authorized on Saturday concerning the Bowery circulation. We presume the arrangement will be generally acted on as though it was not on Saturday in all cases. We have first the unpaid balance due by the Bowery Bank on the Clearing-House settlement of Friday was only $83,000.

There was more Money employed on Street loans on Saturday than for several days previous. A number of negotiations were made on New-York State Stocks, and upon pledge of unencumbered City and country Bank circulation, secured by State Stocks at the Bank Department—the margins being left liberal. The rates we did not learn, except that they were very dear. Even in this way the letting loose of private capital is a public service, in these times. We hope that more of the idle bank depositors who have either drawn Gold, or leaving their money with banks as badly frightened as themselves about using it, will go into the Street and help the needy by buying or lending on New-York State sixes, or something equally sound. Some few parcels of the Illinois State Funded debt are brought into the market, for the first time in several years, by the hard times. From $19,000,000 the debt has been reduced to $12,836,000 in a few years, and is being reduced annually at the rate of about a million of dollars. There is a good demand for Virginias, Ohios and Missouris, and as the holders are still compelled to force sales, the price continues cheap. There was a break-down on Saturday in Illinois Central 7s, Construction Bonds, secured by mortgaged lands, to 50 ⅌ cent. The shares at $10 for $40 paid in. New-York Central shares and bonds were in steady demand. The market left off at 83½ for the Shares; Panama 63, and Delaware and Hudson 78½. The suspended Railroads sold low: Erie, 7½; La Crosse, 5½; Pittsburg 8, and Toledo, 23½. Reading improved to 81½, closing, however, 29½. The City Bank shares were nearly all lower. The decline during the week ranged from 10 to 20 ⅌ cent. The parcels pressed on sale are not large. The sales on Saturday were: Phenix at 60, Commerce at 68½, and Metropolitan at 58 ⅌ cent. The general market in the afternoon was depressed by the heavy failures of the day. There is not much disposition to speculate one way or the other. Most of the business done in dividend-paying securities is on orders. The country banks of this State are sellers of State sixes, and in some instances of New-York Central Stock borrowed to raise money on. The buyers are parties frightened out of bank stocks and mercantile paper, or having deposits at bank which they are in doubt how to employ.

The lock on both the foreign and domestic exchanges continues to be distressingly felt, in all quarters. It has brought down most of the suspended firms, and at least one of the railway corporations announced this week, and is doing ten times the mischief of any other cause at work in the panic. The great body of the small traders who have their business exclusively in bank get along with their payments with some degree of punctuality, though not without renewals and much annoyance. The few transactions on London are at 98@101; on Philadelphia at 93@94; Baltimore, 93@94; Albany and Boston 98½@99. Beyond these few points the blockade is almost complete.

Among the dry goods failures on Friday, not before mentioned, were Messrs. FARTON, LEE & Co., in Barclay-street. Mr. LEE was formerly of the Hudson River Road (Vice-President,) and put into the house $100,000. There were other dry goods failures, one a heavy importing house, rumored on Saturday, but they were either not verified, or resulted in private extensions.

There are two good features in the Foreign Trade of the past week. Light import entries, $2,359,095, (of which only $776,738 in Dry Goods,) against $3,558,534 same time last year, and increased Export clearances, $1,721,980 against $1,412,564 same week last year. These might have been made $2,500,000 but for the low rates and difficulties in the negotiation of bills. The Specie export was only $69,000 against $402,000 direct, and $387,000 via Boston same week last year.

According to the Custom-House tables of the Foreign Trade for ten months of the calendar year, which we published a few days ago, the Importation of Foreign Merchandise into the port of New-York, to the 30th of September, amounted Telegraphic Reports of the Financial Troubles.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE.

HARRISBURG, Saturday, Oct. 10.

The members evince a disposition to complete the session to-day in order to return home for the election this morning.

The House agreed to take up the Relief bill passed by the Senate yesterday. It dispensed with the going into Committee of the Whole, and placed the bill on the second reading.

After a long debate, the proposition to lengthen the time for resumption, from April to the third Monday in January, was lost by a vote of 75 to 69.

A motion to shorten the time to January, 1858, was made, when a substitute was offered, fixing the time for July next. The amendment was lost by 53 to 59.

In the Senate a political discussion arose from a resolution declaring that the whole financial difficulties resulted from the Tariff of 1844, and its modifications by the last Congress.

The subject was finally postponed.

A motion to leave the time indefinite, and the question to the next Legislature, was defeated—yeas, 24; nays, 25.

The original motion, fixing the third Monday in January next, for resumption was lost—yeas, 10; nays, 78.

A motion was made to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, and insert instead the House bill.

The eight last amendments, requiring the banks to pay specie for fives, were carried.

HARRISBURG, Sunday, Oct. 11.

The House yesterday afternoon passed, on the second reading, the Senate Relief Bill, with several amendments,—one of which strikes out the provision requiring the Banks to pay specie for five-dollar notes.

The efforts to change the time for resumption proved futile.

There is a probability that the bill pending in the House, will be defeated to-morrow by a small majority. Many friends of legalization voted against it, hoping, by defeating it, to get a better bill as regards length of time.

SUSPENSION OF THE BANK OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

AUGUSTA, Saturday, Oct. 10.

Reliable telegraphic news from Charleston announces the suspension of the Bank of South Carolina—a State institution, of which C. M. FRAZIER is President.

THE BANK OF KANAWHA.

RICHMOND, Va., Saturday, Oct. 10.

The Governor has issued a proclamation prohibiting the notes of the Bank of Kanawha from being received in payment for money due the State, that bank having refused to redeem its notes, and issued a large amount of its notes beyond the limits of its State.

THE NEW-ORLEANS BANKS.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Oct. 10.

The weekly statement of the New-Orleans Banks, on the 3d inst., shows the usual movement in specie for the week, $776,000; increase of loans $297,000; decrease in circulation, $22,000, and decrease in deposits, $300,000.

BANK CONVENTION IN VIRGINIA.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Oct. 11.

The Richmond Dispatch says, that on the 20th ult., Governor WISE instructed the first Auditor and State Treasurer to correspond with the leading suspended banks, and propose that if they would redeem in 10 days with specie, such of their notes as have been received for State dues, a proclamation of prohibition against the future receipt of their notes would be withheld. The representatives of a portion of the Banks met at Charlottesville on the 7th, and resolved that the course indicated by the Governor was impracticable and injurious; but that the object would be attained if the Banks would contribute two and a half per cent. by the 1st December, to meet the interest on the State Debt due 1st of January. Also, That all the Banks in the Commonwealth, holding demands against the State, be requested to notify the Treasurer that such demands may be satisfied by payment in the issue of the creditors' banks.

The resolutions were presented to the Governor, who did not give a decided opinion, but intimated that he had no intention of prohibiting the receipt of suspended bank issues for the State revenue, as long as the Banks acted in good faith; but he said he had no power to compel the banks of deposit to receive the notes of suspended banks; but as far as practicable he would receive and pay out their issues, trusting to their integrity to redeem as fast as possible.

The Convention approved of these sentiments, and pledged the faith of the respective banks to carry out his views.

Wisconsin and the Panic.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The following observations have occurred to me while traveling in Wisconsin:

The part of the State I have seen presents as fine an agricultural country as man could desire. The crops have been abundant. The people are industrious, simple in their habits, and strictly temperate. The farmers are intelligent and enterprising, work with their own hands, live temperately, wear their clothes thoroughly, and observe all the proprieties of life. So far there was no sign of extravagance.

The trade of the country consists of the exportation of the products of the soil, and the importation of simple necessaries of life, and materials and machinery for the improvement of the country. At this season Fairs are held in the Counties as well as a General State Fair for the purpose of comparing stock, grain, fruit and agricultural implements for the diffusion of information, and to stimulate the spirit of improvement. At these Fairs friends meet and have a worthy pleasure and excitement in the scene, as they present a great contrast and superiority to like assemblages in the old country at which drinking and low amusements, gambling and theatrical buffoonery prevail. The farmers are the bone and framework of the State, and the trades are found accordingly pursuing sound legitimate business.

The cry of land speculation and inflated prices of land required consideration, and I turned to that subject, expecting to find in it the State's contribution to the National embarrassments. The farmers are generally rich, as owners of the soil valued as worth an average of over $35 an acre, while it cost them, for the most part, but $1 25, the Government price, within the last fifteen years. That $35 an acre is a low value to put on land producing on the average twenty bushels of wheat to the acre, and other crops in proportion, can hardly be denied. But what of the cost? At the lake ports less than fifty cents a bushel will give the farmer his profit, and twenty-five cents a bushel will land it in New-York. Is wheat worth 75 cents in New-York? Wheat can even be sent to England at a large profit and allow the farmer, not 50 cents, but 70@80 cents a bushel, and in recent years his profits have been larger. It cannot, therefore, be maintained that land is too highly estimated, judging it by the only true test—the return it yields.

The next subject for investigation was inevitably the money question, and it certainly affords the clue to the devouring extravagance which paralyzes the the whole trade of the country. The crops of Wisconsin are not going to market, because the money to move them cannot be obtained. The season for shipment by the lakes will end next month, and the Winter will come upon the farmers with their crops unsold, so that all progress will be suspended for a season. Why has Wisconsin no money? The farmers require goods in exchange, not gold, but the State debars her people from doing business with any but golden counters or their equivalent. The law requires State Stocks as security for paper issues. The State has no debt, (only $100,000.) The Banks have, therefore, to find their security in the stock of some State which has a sufficient amount of liabilities. For every note issued, more than its amount requires to be sent out of the State to be invested in the debts of other States. This is very ridiculous. The Banks find that after they have paid part of the indebtedness of other States, it is not safe to issue their notes without a further large reserve of specie, unless they contrive to send their issues to a distance, when they will be some time in finding their way back. Thus the law holds out a premium to the notorious system of "Wild-Cat Banking," and the legitimate operations of banking to facilitate the exchanges of commerce are placed at great disadvantages, and hence an aggravated cost of money in its employment in business. If the country is to have a paper currency—and it must to prosper—and if that currency is to be based on State security, the credit of the home State—free of debt!—should be better than any other, and if it could be made available, the amount held in Foreign Stocks would be brought back into the State. If the State would take a large view and act upon it, arguing that paper put in circulation in the State should yield a large profit, and that that profit should belong to the people generally, a development and progress would be achieved worthy of the bountiful provision made for man in the soil. Let the State issue such amount of notes on the State credit as experience will show is required for the internal exchanges of the State. These notes could not be depreciated any more than the State debt could be increased without proper sanction. The notes would always be available for payments to the State, and if properly regulated, would be found in practice convertible into specie when required. The State would at once gain back the amount invested in other State Stocks, and several millions of notes would be paid out by the Government, and to that extent the people might be relieved of taxation for a season. There is no chance of Wisconsin buying more than she can pay for, but continue to make her buy gold, in place of supplying her real wants, and you expose her to all the vicissitudes of fortune flowing through the older States and England. It is bold to announce such views, contrary to the strong current of opinion in the opposite direction, but in these times, when great errors in the existing system become plain, who is entitled to denounce other opinions? The present crisis is mainly a currency difficulty, and the present currency laws both in this country and England are laws of periodical panic and commercial confusion. Gold is the best measure of value, but to use it in substance as a circulating medium, or to hold it in reserve to secure a paper currency, is ruinously expensive. There never can be a sufficient supply, and by so putting it out of its natural position as an ordinary article of commerce, an artificial influence bears upon its supply, and the demand for it causing incalculable fluctuations, and hence unbounded confusion, as now.

A NORTH BRITON.

The Banks Cannot Help Us.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your different papers, for the last two or three days, you publish letters from anonymous correspondents, in which they reproach the different City Banks for not discounting a certain sum of money, and thereby aiding merchants, &c., in paying their notes, drafts, &c. Now, if the Banks should discount, what paper could they take for that purpose, as every one is suspending at this time? If you will publish this note, you will oblige

A FRIEND OF THE BANKS.

The Rule Suspended.

To the Stockholders and Bondholders of the New-York and Erie Railroad Company:

The event we have dreaded and foreshadowed to you at the two meetings held on the 23d September, and on the 2d inst., has at last occurred.

This Company has been forced to allow its engagements falling due to-day to be protested, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of its officers, who, at great pecuniary sacrifice, succeeded in obtaining temporary loans, through which they hoped that they could be enabled to pay in full, upon the maturity of the last installment, and thus prevent the necessity of this company.

Every effort shall be made by your Board to relieve the Company, so as to provide your valuable property from [illegible] sacrifice, and to secure the interests of the holders of bonds, at the rate of before-mentioned stock in Illinois Central, and provided in interest.

A [illegible] meeting of stockholders will be called at an early day, at which a full report will be made of the present condition of the Company, and the measures which will be adopted for its future management.

In the meantime, we would earnestly request every stockholder who may be able to do so, to pay the installment now due upon his stock, and to urge his friends who have received in cash will enable the Company to meet its payments of [illegible], and the balance of the subscription thus could be made very gradual and easy, without danger to this company.

In view of the present state of things we invite you to meet together on Wednesday evening next, the 14th inst., at 7½ o'clock P. M., at the Mercantile Library, Astor-place.

By order of the Board of Directors,
CHARLES MORAN, President.

NATHANIEL MARSH, Secretary.

The Illinois Central Assignment.

The Directors of the Illinois Central Railroad Company are under the painful necessity of announcing that, notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions to avert such a result, the Company is forced to suspend payment.

The existing derangement in the financial affairs of the country surprised the Company with a large floating debt incurred for the completion and equipment of the road. To provide for its payment when the usual credits became unavailable, an assessment of ten dollars per share was promptly made, and upon this side of the Atlantic, largely paid in advance, enabling the Company to meet its engagements in September. The installments upon the stock held abroad have been in rapid progress of payment, but the negotiation of the bills of exchange drawn against them, difficult at first, has at length become impossible.

All other and usual modes of raising money are well known to be entirely unavailable. It would be in vain at this time to call in another installment on the stock, as the same difficulties which prevent the realizing of the proceeds of the one already called, in season to meet the current obligations of the Company, would attend its early further payment.

The Directors have therefore yielded to the stern necessity of the case, reluctantly, but with a clear conviction that the true interests of both creditors and stockholders would be promoted by the legal steps which, under the advice of able counsel, have been taken to secure their respective rights.

The Coupons due on the Construction Bonds, Oct. 1, have been paid to a large extent, and a provision has been made to receive the balance outstanding in payment of unpaid installments, if desired by the holder. No serious inconvenience will probably result therefrom.

All possible exertions will be used to pay off every liability without unnecessary delay, and to relieve the Company from its present embarrassment.

As this has not arisen from any difficulties intrinsic in the enterprise, but from the extraordinary condition of the money market, the Directors see therein no cause to shake the confidence they have heretofore felt and expressed in the value of the road and the lands of the Company.

By order of the Board.
J. N. PERKINS, Treasurer.

Money Affairs in Other Quarters.

From the American Publishers' Circular.

It will be gratifying to learn that, notwithstanding the unprecedented depression of commercial matters, and the remarkable stringency of the money market, the six months' notes held by GEORGE A. LEAVITT & Co., on account of the Spring Trade Sales, amounting to a very large sum, were all paid at maturity (Oct. 3,) with the exception of two or three which were not taken up, simply because no exchange could be procured, but which were satisfactorily secured, and will be met in a few days. This fact will go far to confirm the expression of an experienced bank officer to the effect that booksellers' notes are the best in the market.

From the Baltimore Patriot.

Existing difficulties in New-York, Philadelphia and elsewhere, have had the effect of producing more stringency in our market. The Banks here to-day are discounting with great caution. Quite an amount of mercantile paper is being turned down, and confidence not quite so strong. Capitalists are less disposed to purchase on the street, and good notes are difficult to dispose of at 3@3½ ⅌ cent a month; second class unsalable. Money on call 1½@2 ⅌ cent.

Exchange on the North, especially on New-York, is, under existing rumors, very much unsettled. We quote it nominally at 4@6 ⅌ cent. premium—bankers not disposed to purchase. Gold is being bought by the brokers at 4 ⅌ cent. premium.

If all our banking houses would imitate the commendable example of Messrs. HAZARD & SONS, and refuse to purchase one dollar gold pieces, small change would be in greater abundance.

Virginia bank notes (old) 2½@2 ⅌ cent. discount—new do. 5@10 ⅌ cent. discount. North Carolina bank notes are selling to some extent at 5@10 ⅌ cent. discount. Exchange on England 7@8 ⅌ cent. premium in Baltimore funds.

From the Memphis Eagle.

The Planters' Bank, and the Union Bank, could not inaugurate a better policy for their permanent profit, than to commence at once the redemption of their notes at the mother banks and at the branches, in coin. Every man of character and property in the country would be on the side of those banks; the notes being equivalent to coin all over the State, would be held in preference to exchanging them for gold and silver. Shinplasters and note, shaving would then disappear like a frost in June.

From the Chicago Times.

There is no change of importance to note in the general condition of the Money Market. The demand for loans and discounts is active, but bankers do not discount except in exceptional cases. If a man who has a note to pay, can get an extension, he thinks himself fortunate. Exchange on the eastern cities is scarce as ever, and ranges from 10 to 15 ⅌ cent. We have met with instances of exchange at both these extremes to-day. Gold is bought up by brokers, usually at 5 ⅌ cent., but some have paid as high as 10 ⅌ cent. to-day, and sold it, of course, at an advantage.

Still, it cannot be concealed, that confidence, which is proverbially a plant of slow growth, is being gradually restored. There has been no run on the banks for several days; the payments due on the fourth, were promptly met, and the "panic" has entirely subsided. A better day is dawning.

From the Pittsburgh American.

The Money market is unchanged, and the street rates for A No. 1 paper range at 1½@2 ⅌ cent. ⅌ month, and very little selling.

The rates for domestic exchange are too much unsettled to give anything like reliable quotations, which is also the case with uncurrent Bank notes, the brokers buying cautiously and at irregular prices.

The following are to-day's quotations for specie, payable in Bankable funds:
